Syn. vague, confused, mixed, shadowy, indefinite.

nec-es-sa-ry (nĕs′ĕ-sā-rĭ), adj. [< Lat. necesse, needful], 1, existing from the nature of the case; as, a necessary conclusion; 2, not to be done without; essential; indispensable; as, food is necessary to life; 3, unavoidable; inevitable; as, the necessary result of an act; 4, obligatory; imperative: Obs. or Dial., giving useful or indispensable services: said of persons:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], 1, a thing which cannot be done without: usually pl.; 2, specifically, a water-closet or privy.—adv. nec′es-sa-ri-ly.

Syn., adj. essential, indispensable, needful, requisite, inevitable, expedient, required, needed, compulsory, unavoidable, intrinsic. Necessary may describe that which must exist in the course of nature, or must be true according to logic, or must be present if a desired end is to be accomplished, or must be so because of our point of view; as, it is necessary to live in order to die; a necessary consequence; a necessary element; polite usage makes many little courtesies necessary. Essential does not involve the idea of point of view or of circumstances; essential means absolutely necessary; a thing is not complete or whole if deprived of any essential part. A motor is essential if an automobile is to go by its own power; balloon tires may be necessary from the point of view of comfort. Indispensable is applied to that which may not be done without; money is indispensable; clothing is indispensable. Requisite is less absolute than either necessary or indispensable; it applies to that which is required, but requirements vary with the minds dealing with them, so that requisite gains a relative tone. What is requisite for the comfort of a fine lady would seem unnecessary to a man who needed food. Needful reflects the idea of actual want, though it differs from necessary in a degree; if new clothes are merely needful, we may perhaps get along for a time by patching and care; if new clothes are necessary, there is no alternative to getting them. That is inevitable which is necessary because one cannot get away from it; what goes up must come down—an inevitable result; what is born must die—an inevitable end. That is expedient which is necessary from the point of view of aptness, suitability, or advantage. (See inherent.)

ne-ces-si-tate (nē-sĕs′ĭ-tāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -tated, p.pr. -tating], 1, to imply as a condition or result; make unavoidable; 2, to compel; oblige; require; demand; force.

née (nā), p.adj. [Fr. = born], born: often placed before the maiden name of a married woman; as, Mrs. Smith, née Brown.

need (nēd), n. [< A.S. nīed, necessity and nēod, desire < O.Teut. source], 1, lack of anything desired or useful; 2, hence, poverty; straitened circumstances; 3, necessity; imperative demand; as, there is need of great caution; 4, a time of great difficulty; crisis:—v.t. to stand in want of; require; have use for:—v.i. 1, to be in poverty or want; 2, to be necessary: used impersonally; as, it needs to be done; 3, to be under obligation to: in this sense used with infinitive without to, and without inflection in the third person singular; as, he need not go.

Syn., n. necessity, want, essential, compulsion, urgency. Need is a state of circumstances requiring something, or the something required. Necessity, as compared with need, is more urgent, has, in fact, the element of compulsion in it. We may be in need of diversion, but if we cannot afford it, we go without it; the necessities of life are things without which life cannot be maintained. Need implies that you can get what is required; necessity implies that you must get it; want simply implies that you do not have it. One in want of money has no money; one in need of money may be longing for luxuries. A house in need of paint does not look its best; a house in want of paint has depreciated in worth. An essential is an element without which a thing cannot be complete or whole; an essential is therefore in the highest degree a necessity to the thing of which it is a part. (See poverty.)

need-ful (nēd'fo͝ol), adj. indispensable; necessary. required: Archaic, needy; indigent.

Syn. requisite, needed, required. (See necessary.)

nee-dle (nē'dl), n. [< A.S. nǣdl, needle < O.Teut. source], 1, a small, sharp-pointed steel sewing instrument, furnished with an eye to hold thread; 2, a thin, straight rod used in knitting or, when hooked at the end, for crocheting; 3, any slender, sharply pointed object similar to a needle, as the pointed instrument used in etching, or a sharp, peaked rock; 4, the magnetic bar in a compass: Bot., a leaf having the shape of a needle; as, a pine needle: needle gun, formerly, a small firearm, the cartridge of which is exploded by a blow from the point of a steel needle: needle-point, 1, a kind of embroidery done with a needle over a pattern stamped on canvas; 2, needle-point lace: needle-point lace, lace made entirely with a needle on a paper or parchment pattern; point lace:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -dled (-ld), p.pr. -dling], Colloq., to strengthen, as beer, by adding raw alcohol.

neg-lect (nĕg-lĕkt'), v.t. [< Lat. negligere (-lectus), to neglect < nec-, not+legere, to pick up], 1, to fail to do, by carelessness or design; as, to neglect a duty; 2, to slight; ignore; disregard; as, to neglect a point in reasoning; 3, to fail to pay attention to; leave uncared for; as, to neglect a child:—n. 1, failure to do that which should be done; 2, state of being neglected; 3, lack of care or attention; disregard; indifference; 4, carelessness; slovenliness.

Syn., n. carelessness, inattention, neglectfulness, negligence, oversight, heedlessness, thoughtlessness, inadvertence, remissness. Neglect and negligence are often used interchangeably to name the act of slighting, or omitting, a duty, attention, or other thing that should have been heeded or performed; as, a single instance of neglect cost him his life; the gateman's criminal negligence. Certain differences, however, appear in their usage; we speak of the neglect, not negligence, of duty, studies, business, or health. Neglect of one's clothes means not taking care of them; negligence in attire means a careless disregard of how it is arranged and worn. Negligence is ordinarily used to name habitual neglect.

neg-lect-ful (nĕg-lĕkt'fo͝ol), adj. 1, indicating disregard; indifferent; 2, careless; negligent.—adv. neg-lect'ful-ly.—n. neg-lect'ful-ness.

Syn. negligent, heedless, inattentive, unmindful.

neg-li-gee (nĕg'lĭ-zhā'; nĕg'lĭ-zhā"), n. [Fr. < Lat. negligere: see neglect], 1, a soft, loosely fitting dress or gown; 2, any easy, unceremonious dress; 3, undress; scant attire:—adj. carelessly or scantily attired. Also, né"gli"gé' (nā"glē"zhā').

neg-li-gence (nĕg'lĭ-jĕns), n. [see negligent], 1, the habit of not doing that which should be done; neglect; 2, carelessness; thoughtlessness; as, the accident was due to negligence; 3, disregard of appearance, manner, or style; 4, freedom from conventionality or artificiality in art or literature: Law, failure to exercise ordinary and reasonable care under the circumstances of a situation, as a result of which injury is caused to another.

Syn. heedlessness, remissness, laxness. (See neglect.)

neg-li-gent (nĕg'lĭ-jĕnt), adj. [< Lat. negligentia, carelessness < negligere, to neglect: see neglect], 1, inclined to leave undone what should be done; 2, careless; heedless; inattentive; 3, free from restraint and conventionality, as in art and literature.—adv. neg'li-gent-ly.

Syn. remiss, lax, inattentive, regardless, inadvertent, neglectful, thoughtless. The negligent person is careless; he fails, through laziness, lack of will power, or for no reason at all, to do what he should do. One who is remiss lacks the energy to remember what he should do, or the force to do it if he does remember. He is inadvertent who lets things slip by him unintentionally while he is thinking of something else; if such preoccupation becomes constant, the individual is termed inattentive. Regardless describes one heedless of consequences, negligent of others in inconsiderate ways; as, regardless of safety; regardless of other people's feelings, he spoke his mind. Lax, literally the opposite of tense and rigid, is figuratively the opposite of severe, strict, and stringent; in its figurative sense it means loose and negligent, and is applied chiefly to a lack of fiber in morals, discipline, standards, or the like.

nine-pins (nīn'pĭnz″), n. pl. used as sing. [nine+pin], a game which consists in bowling a ball at nine pins set up at one end of a bowling alley.

nine-teen (nīn'tēn″; nīn'tēn'), adj. [<A.S. nigontīne<nigon, nine+tīen, ten], composed of ten more than nine:—n. (nīn'tēn″), 1, the sum of eighteen and one, or one less than twenty; 2, a symbol representing nineteen units, as 19 or xix; 3, a group of nineteen units.—adj. and n. nine'teenth".

nine-ty (nīn'tĭ), adj. [<A.S. nigon, nine+-tig, tens], composed of nine times ten:—n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, the sum of eighty-nine and one; 2, a character or symbol representing ninety units, as 90 or xc.—adj. and n. nine'ti-eth.

nin-ny (nĭn'ĭ), n. [pl. -nies (-ĭz)], [perh. corr. of innocent], a foolish person; simpleton; dunce.

ninth (nīnth), adj. [see nine], 1, next in order after the eighth: the ordinal of nine; 2, designating one of the nine equal parts of anything:—n. 1, the quotient of one divided by nine; 2, one of the nine equal parts of anything: Mus., 1, an interval covering the difference in pitch between a note and the note immediately following its octave above, as c′—d″; 2, the note at this interval above another note; 3, the resultant sound from striking these two notes together.

Ni-nus (nī'nŭs), n. [Lat.<Gk. Ninos], in Greek narratives, the founder of Nineveh, and husband of Semiramis.

Ni-o-be (nī'ō-bē), n. [<Gk.], Gk. Myth., daughter of Tantalus and wife of Amphion, king of Thebes, whose fourteen children were slain by Apollo and Artemis, because she in her pride compared herself with their mother, Leto, who had only two children; changed by Zeus into a stone which in summer shed tears.—adj. Ni'o-be'an.

ni-o-bi-um (nī-ō'bĭ-ŭm), n. [L.L.<Gk. Niobē, in allusion to association with the element tantalum], Chem., a rare metallic element [symbol Nb], found in minerals containing tantalum: now usually called columbium [symbol Cb].

1nip (nĭp), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. nipped (nĭpt), p.pr. nipping], [< M.E. nippen, to nip < O.Teut. source], 1, to pinch; 2, to cut off the end of; 3, to check; restrain; as, to nip a thing in the bud; 4, to blight; blast; destroy, as by frost:—n. 1, a pinch, as with the nails or teeth; a bite; 2, a blast or blight, as by cold; 3, a sharp retort; sarcasm; 4, a very small quantity; as, a nip of salt: nip and tuck, equality, or equal; as, it was nip and tuck between them: a nip-and-tuck contest.

2nip (nĭp), n. [prob. contr. of nipperkin, small measure of wine, perh. < Du. source], a small drink of spirits, especially if often repeated:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. nipped (nĭpt), p.pr. nipping], to take a nip, especially of an alcoholic liquor.

nip-per (nĭp'ẽr), n. [see 1nip], 1, one who or that which pinches or cuts off; 2, a horse's incisor tooth; 3, a large claw, as of a crab; 4, any of several kinds of fish; 5, a small boy: pl. any of various tools with jaws for gripping or clipping; pincers; forceps; tongs.

nip-ple (nĭp'l), n. [perh. dim. of nib], 1, Anat., the conical protuberance of a breast, containing the orifices of the milk ducts; a pap; a teat, especially on a woman's breast; 2, an artificial contrivance of rubber substituted for the female teat, as the mouthpiece of a nursing bottle; 3, any of various devices resembling a nipple, as the projection on a gun breech, receiving the percussion cap, or a short, threaded or corrugated projection from a pipe, to which a faucet, hose, or the like, is attached, or a short piece of pipe threaded at both ends.

PIPE NIPPLE

Nip-pon-ese (nĭp"ŏn-nēz', -nēs'), n. sing. and pl. [< Jap. Nippon, Japan < Chin. Jihpĕn, place where the sun rises], a Japanese; the Japanese:—adj. Japanese.

NIRA abbr. National Industrial Recovery Act: an act of Congress passed in 1933.

Nir-va-na (nẽr-vä'nȧ; nẽr-), n. [Sans. = a blowing out, extinction < nirvā, to blow], Buddhism, the highest religious state, when all desire for existence is destroyed, and the soul becomes one with its Creator by absorption into the supreme spirit.

Ni-san (nī'sȧn; nē-sän'), n. [Heb. < Assyr. Nisannu, flower month], in the ancient Hebrew ecclesiastical calendar, the first month, nearly equivalent to April (Neh. 2:1): earlier called Abib (Ex. 13:4): the month during which the Passover occurs (see App. II).

ni-si (nī'sī), conj. [Lat. = if not, unless], unless: used in certain legal phrases; as, a decree nisi, a decree to take effect at a specified time unless modified or avoided, as by subsequent proceedings: nisi prius (prī'ŭs), [Lat. = unless before], Eng. Law, a form of writ whereby the sheriff of a county was required to send a jury to Westminster on a specified date for the trial of a cause, unless before that date the justices should come to the county in question, as they were always sure to do: hence, trial at nisi prius, trial of a civil cause at the assizes before a judge and jury.

nit (nĭt), n. [< A.S. hnitu, louse's egg], 1, the egg of any parasitic insect, as a flea or louse; 2, the young insect; 3, hence, a very small speck.

ni-ter (nī'tẽr), n. [< Fr. nitre < Lat. nitrum < Gk. nitron, prob. < Heb. nether, niter], Chem., 1, potassium nitrate, a white salt, widely distributed in nature, formed in soils from nitrogenous organic bodies by the action of bacteria: used in making gunpowder, for preserving meat, and in medicine: also called saltpeter; 2, popularly, sweet spirit of niter: sweet spirit of niter, an alcoholic solution of ethyl nitrite used in medicine as a sedative: often called niter. Also, ni'tre (-tẽr).

ni-ter cake Chem., acid sodium sulphate, or sodium bisulphate, an important white crystalline solid, a by-product of the manufacture of nitric acid: used for grease recovery, bleaching and dyeing, and metal pickling, as a flux, and in the manufacture of hydrochloric acid and fertilizers.

ni-ton (nī'tŏn), n. [prob. < Lat. nitēre, to shine], Chem., radon, a gaseous radium emanation, classified as an element [symbol Nt, or Rn] which confers radioactive properties on substances with which it comes into contact.

ni-trate (nī'trāt), n. [see niter], 1, a salt of nitric acid; 2, specifically, nitrate of potassium or nitrate of sodium, used extensively as a fertilizer: nitrate of silver, a white crystalline salt, made by dissolving silver in nitric acid, used in photography and in cauterizing; lunar caustic:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. nitrated, p.pr. nitrating], Chem., 1, to subject to the action of nitric acid; 2, to convert into a salt by combination with nitric acid.—n. ni-tra'tion.

ni-tric (nī'trĭk), adj. Chem., 1, pertaining to, or containing, nitrogen; 2, designating compounds of nitrogen and oxygen which contain more oxygen than those to which the name nitrous is applied: nitric acid, a colorless to yellowish, fuming liquid with powerful corrosive properties, oxidizing and destroying organic matter: used in etching steel or copper, in chemical analysis, and in the manufacture of explosives, dyestuffs, etc.: also called aqua fortis.

ni-tride (nī'trīd; -trĭd), n. Chem., a compound of nitrogen with another element, particularly phosphorus, boron, etc., or a metal. Also, ni'trid.

ni-tri-fi-ca-tion (nī"trĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [see nitrify], Chem., the production of niter or nitrates; especially, the process by which ammonia and other nitrogenous compounds in soils are converted into nitrates by the action of bacteria.

ni-tri-fi-er (nī'trĭ-fī"ẽr), n. Chem., anything which serves to bring about or facilitate the production of niter or nitrates; especially, any substance which is capable of oxidizing ammonia to nitric acid, or nitrous to nitric acid.

ni-tri-fy (nī'trĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Fr. nitrifier < Lat. nitrum, niter + -ficare < facere, to make], Chem., 1, to combine or saturate with nitrogen; change by the process of oxidizing into nitric or nitrous acid or their salts; 2, to impregnate with nitrates, as soils, for plant growth.

ni-trite (nī'trīt), n. [see niter], Chem., a salt of nitrous acid, which contains a smaller amount of oxygen than a nitrate.

ni-tro-bac-te-ri-a [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + bacteria], soil bacteria which cause nitrification, by oxidizing ammonia into nitrites, and nitrites into nitrates, especially in soil: usually, nitrifying bacteria.

ni-tro-ben-zene (nī"trō-bĕn'zēn; -bĕn-zēn'), n. [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + benzene], Chem., a poisonous, yellow, oily liquid with the odor of bitter almonds, prepared from benzene by the action of nitric acid: used in perfumery, flavoring, as a source of aniline in the manufacture of dyestuffs, etc.: also called nitrobenzol; oil of mirbane.

ni-tro-cel-lu-lose (nī"trō-sĕl'ū-lōs), n. [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + cellulose], Chem., a compound of nitrogen and cellulose, prepared from nitric acid and cotton or wood fiber: used in making explosives, pyroxylin, collodion, etc.

ni-tro-gel-a-tin (nī"trō-jĕl'ȧ-tĭn), n. [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + gelatin: in allusion to gelatinous consistency], Chem., an explosive consisting of nitroglycerin, guncotton, and camphor. Also, ni"tro-gel'a-tine (-tĭn).

ni-tro-gen (nī'trō-jĕn), n. [< Gk. nitron, niter + -genēs, born], Chem., a colorless, odorless, tasteless, inert, gaseous element [symbol N], which forms four fifths of the volume of the atmosphere, and is the basis of nitric acid: occurring in combination in all animal and vegetable tissue and as a constituent of soils: nitrogen fixation, the process of combining the nitrogen of the atmosphere into any of various fixed, or stable, chemical compounds that may be used for the manufacture of explosives, ammonia, fertilizers, etc.: nitrogen monoxide, nitrous oxide, or laughing gas.

ni-trog-e-nize (nī-trŏj'ẽ-nīz; nī'trō-jĕn-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nized (-nīzd), p.pr. -nizing], to combine, impregnate, or saturate with the gas nitrogen or compounds containing nitrogen.

ni-trog-e-nous (nī-trŏj'ẽ-nŭs), adj. Chem., pertaining to, or containing, the gas nitrogen; especially, designating any of many compounds, generally organic, in which nitrogen is an important constituent, as urea, proteins, or nucleins: nitrogenous foods, foods containing some form of proteid, a substance composed mainly of nitrogen, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and sulphur, found especially in lean meats, egg albumen, milk, and, in smaller quantities, in all vegetables and grains.

ni-tro-glyc-er-in (nī"trō-glĭs'ẽr-ĭn), n. [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + glycerin], Chem., a heavy, light yellow, oily liquid, prepared by the action of nitric and sulphuric acids upon glycerin: a powerful explosive, and used in minute quantities as a heart stimulant: also called nitroglycerol, and, in medicine, glonoin. Also, ni"tro-glyc'er-ine.

ni-tro-hy-dro-chlo-ric ac-id (nī"trō-hī"drō-klō'rĭk), [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter) + hydrochloric], Chem., a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids: used especially for dissolving the noble metals, being the only acid that will dissolve gold: also called aqua regia.

ni-tro-lime (nī'trō-līm), n. [nitro- (< Gk. nitron, niter + lime], calcium cyanimide, a hydrogen compound used as a fertilizer (see cyanimide).

ni-trous (nī'trŭs), adj. [see niter], resembling, obtained from, or containing niter, or saltpeter: Chem., designating nitrogen compounds containing less oxygen than those designated by nitric: nitrous acid, an acid compound of nitrogen, not found in a free state, but forming a large series of salts, the nitrites: nitrous oxide, a colorless gas of sweetish odor and taste, used as an anæsthetic, especially in dentistry: also called nitrogen monoxide, or laughing gas.

nit-wit (nĭt'wĭt'), n. [<nit (prob. an assimilation of not to following syllable)+²*wit*], a simpleton.

Ni-vôse (nē"vōz'; nĭv'ōs), n. [Fr.<Lat. nivosus, abounding in snow<niz, nivis, snow], the fourth month, from December 21 to January 19, in the calendar of the first French Republic.

nix (nĭks), n. [pl. nixes (nĭk'sĕz; -sĭz)], [Ger.<O.H.G. nichus, a water elf], Teut. Myth., a water elf or fairy, beneficent or mischievous.—n. fem. nix'ie.

Ni-zam (nē-zäm'), n. [Hind.<Pers.<Arab. nizām, order, arrangement], a native ruler of the state of Hyderabad, Deccan, India: nizam, sing. and pl. a soldier in the Turkish regular army.

N. J. abbr. official abbreviation for the State of New Jersey.

Njorth (nyôrth), n. [<O.N. Njördhr], Teut. Myth., the father of Frey and Freya, god of the sea and winds, and protector of sailors. Also, Njör'thr (nyör'thr); Njord (nyôrd).

N. M. abbr. New Mexico (official):—N. N.E. northnortheast:—N. N. W., north-northwest.

¹no (nō), adv. [<A.S. nā, ne, no, not+ā, ever], 1, nay; not so; as, No, I cannot go: opposite of yes; 2, not any; not at all; as, he is no better; 3, not; as, whether or no: especially in Scotland; as, will ye no help me? —n. [pl. noes; no's (nōz)], 1, a reply of denial or refusal; as, to answer no; 2, a negative vote or decision: pl. the voters in the negative; as, the noes have it.

²no (nō), adj. [see none], not any; not one; as, he has no reason.

No. abbr. 1, North (also, N.); 2, number:—N. O., natural order; 2, New Orleans.

No-a-chi-an (nō-ā'kĭ-ăn), adj. [see Noah], pertaining to the patriarch Noah or his time.

No-ah (nō'ä), n. [Heb.=rest], Bib., the Hebrew patriarch who built the ark to protect his family from the great deluge: Noah's ark, 1, the ark built by Noah in which his family and animals lived to escape the great flood (Gen. 6–9); 2, a child's toy ark filled with wooden people and animals.

¹nob (nŏb), n. [perh. var. of knob], a knob: Cribbage, the jack of trumps when in hand or crib: also called nobs: Slang, the head.

²nob (nŏb), n. [source uncertain], Slang, a person of note; nobleman; swell.

nob-ble (nŏb'l), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. nobbled (-ld), p.pr. nobbling], [source uncertain], Slang, 1, to take without right; steal; 2, to win by underhanded means; secure by cheating.

nob-by (nŏb'ĭ), adj. [comp. -bier, superl. -biest], [<²*nob*], Slang, extremely showy or smart; very stylish; as, a nobby turnout.

No-bel priz-es (nō-bĕl'), [<proper name], five prizes, averaging $40,000 each, established by Alfred B. Nobel (1833–96), Swedish chemist, the originator of dynamite, to be given annually to those persons who are judged to have done most in the fields of science (physics, chemistry, medicine or physiology), literature, and the maintenance of peace.

no-bil-i-ty (nō-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [<Lat. nobilitas, fame, excellence, akin to noscere, to know], 1, the state or quality of being great, excellent, or worthy; 2, dignity of character; greatness; 3, those who possess the characteristics of nobleness; 4, high birth or rank as denoted by a title; 5, the body of persons of rank above the common people; the peerage; aristocracy; as, the nobility of Europe.

Syn. aristocracy, peerage, rank, grandeur, loftiness.

no-ble (nō'bl), adj. [comp. nobler, superl. noblest], [<Lat. nobilis, well-known; high-born, akin to noscere, to know], 1, high in excellence or worth; lofty; illustrious; 2, high in rank; of ancient lineage or descent; aristocratic; as, noble birth; 3, stately in appearance; grand; imposing; as, noble architecture: Metal., precious; pure; genuine; specifically, not readily attacked by oxygen, as gold, silver, etc.:—n. 1, a person of high rank and title; a nobleman; a British peer; 2, an old British gold coin or a Scotch silver coin. —adv. no'bly.—n. no'ble-ness.

Syn., adj. lofty, elevated, magnificent, aristocratic, honorable, renowned, famous, magnanimous, generous. —Ant., adj. narrow, small, insignificant, obscure.

no-ble-man (nō'bl-măn), n. [pl. -men (-mĕn)], [noble+man], a man of rank above that of a commoner; peer.—n. fem. no'ble-wom'an.

no-blesse o-blige (nō"blĕs' ō"blēzh'), [Fr. = nobleness obliges], rank entails responsibility; nobleness of conduct is expected from those who are well-born.

no-bod-y (nō'bŏd-ĭ), n. [pl. nobodies (-ĭz)], [²*no* +body], 1, no one; as, nobody came; 2, hence, a person of no importance, influence, or social rank; as, he was a nobody until he married money.

¹nock (nŏk), n. [perh.<Du. nok: see ²nock], 1, a notch, as at the end of an arrow to receive the bowstring; 2, a notch or groove at either end of a bow, in which the bowstring fits:—v.t. to set (the arrow) on the bowstring.

²nock (nŏk), n. [<Du. nok or L.G. nokk, a projection or tip, as of a yardarm or sail], the forward upper corner, as of a boom sail.

noc-tam-bu-lism (nŏk-tăm'bū-lĭzm), n. [<Lat. nox (noctis), night+ambulare, to walk], the act or practice of walking in one's sleep; somnambulism.—n. noc-tam'bu-list.

Noc-tu-i-dæ (nŏk-tū'ĭ-dē), n.pl. [<Lat. noctua, night owl], Entom., a family of moths, including those of the cutworm and army worm.—n. and adj. noc'tu-id.—adj. noc-tu'i-dous.

noc-turn (nŏk'tûrn), n. [<L.L. nocturna, pertaining to night<Lat. nox (noctis), night], Eccl., in early times, a service held at midnight, or between midnight and daybreak; Gk. and R. C. Ch., one of the services belonging to matins, the canonical hour between midnight and daybreak; Mus., a nocturne.

noc-tur-nal (nŏk-tûr'năl), adj. 1, of or pertaining to night; as, a nocturnal visit; 2, active or seeking food at night; as, nocturnal birds.

noc-turne (nŏk'tûrn; nŏk-tûrn'), n. [Fr.: see noc-turn], in painting, a picture of a night scene: Mus., a quiet, dreamy song without words, usually for piano: also written nocturn.

nod (nŏd), n. [<M.E. nodden, to nod], 1, the act of bowing or inclining the head; 2, a quick inclination of the head; 3, the inclination of the head as the sign of absolute authority; as, the people awaited the ruler's nod; 4, a hanging downward; a bending forward of the top of anything, as a tree or flower; —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. nodded, p.pr. nodding], 1, to incline or bend forward with a quick movement; as, to nod the head in token of assent, salutation, invitation, etc., or from drowsiness; 2, to signify by a quick inclination of the head; as, to nod assent:—v.i. 1, to incline or bend forward the top with a quick motion; bend downward; as, flowers nod in the breeze; 2, to bend the head in token of assent, salutation, etc.; 3, to bend the head forward sleepily; be drowsy.—n. nod'der (nŏd'ẽr).

nod-al (nōd'ăl), adj. [see node], of, pertaining to, or like, a node or nodes.

Syn. expunge, wipe out, destroy, efface. (See erase.)

ob-liv-i-on (ŏb-lĭv′ĭ-ŭn), n. [< Lat. oblivio (-onis) < oblivisci, to forget], 1, a state of utter forgetfulness or of being forgotten; 2, amnesty or official public pardon by which punishment is remitted.

ob-liv-i-ous (ŏb-lĭv′ĭ-ŭs), adj. 1, lost in thought; abstracted; 2, forgetful; used with of or to: Poet., causing forgetfulness.—adv. ob-liv′i-ous-ly.—n. ob-liv′i-ous-ness.

Syn. forgetful, abstracted, absorbed, absent-minded. A poor memory makes one forgetful; oblivious describes rather the state of one lost in deep forgetfulness. One who is forgetful cannot recall what he wishes, is guilty of inadvertent omissions, neglectfulness, or the like. One is oblivious through preoccupation, weakness, age, sleep, or some similar cause; as, oblivious of the passage of time. That usage of oblivious which makes it mean merely "not conscious" is not sanctioned; we say he seemed unconscious of my resentment, not oblivious to it.

ob-long (ŏb′lông), adj. [< Lat. ob, across + longus, long], longer than broad: said usually of a figure having its sides parallel or almost so:—n. a rectangle longer than it is broad.

ob-scu-ra-tion (ŏb″skū-rā′shŭn), n. [< Lat. obscurare (-atus), to cover over], 1, darkness; indistinctness; something made dim; 2, the act of darkening, or of making something ambiguous, mysterious, or complex: Astron., occultation; the obscuring of one heavenly body by the passage of another between it and the observer.

ob-scure (ŏb-skūr′), adj. [< O.F. obscur < Lat. obscurus, dark; covered over], 1, not clear or distinct; clouded; not readily seen; 2, shadowy; dim; dark; 3, not clear to the mind; hence, not easily understood; as, an obscure meaning; 4, illegible, as writing; 5, remote; unknown; as, an obscure little village; 6, secluded; humble; lowly; as, he occupied an obscure position:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. obscured (-skūrd′), p.pr. obscuring], 1, to darken; 2, to hide from view; 3, to disguise or render less intelligible; as, to obscure one's meaning.—adv. ob-scure′ly.—n. ob-scure′ness.

Syn., adj. ambiguous, indistinct, vague, hidden, unintelligible, difficult, abstruse, profound. Obscure, as here compared, describes that which is not clearly expressed, and hence is doubtful, unintelligible, or illegible; as, obscure meanings or passages in a text; obscure inscriptions on monuments. Vague ideas are ill-defined, hazy, clouded; vague ambitions are indefinite; vague explanations carry no clear meaning to be grasped by the mind. Ambiguous phrases or passages have two possible senses. (See equivocal.) That is difficult which is hard for the mind to get at, and hence is perplexing or puzzling, as a problem or course of action. The hidden, profound, and abstruse are hard to understand. Hidden meanings are often revealed by the second reading of a good book. Abstruse thoughts are far away from the ordinary paths of the average man's thinking. Profound reflections or subjects require deep study and thought for their comprehension.

ob-scu-ri-ty (ŏb-skū′rĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, dimness or indistinctness of a place or object; 2, lack of clearness of thought or expression; 3, state or fact of being unknown to fame.

ob-se-crate (ŏb′sē-krāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -crated, p.pr. -crating], [< Lat. obsecrare (-atus), to entreat < ob, on account of + sacer, sacred], Rare, to beg; implore.

ob-se-cra-tion (ŏb″sē-krā′shŭn), n. an earnest entreaty: Eccl., any petition in the Litany introduced by the word by (or, in Latin, per).

ob-se-quies (ŏb′sē-kwĭz), n.pl. [pl. of obs. obsequy < O.F. obsequ < L.L. obsequiae, followings; funeral rites < Lat. ob, near + sequi, to follow], funeral rites or ceremonies.

ob-se-qui-ous (ŏb-sē′kwĭ-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. obsequium, compliance], meanly submissive to the will of another; servile; fawning.—adv. ob-se′qui-ous-ly.—n. ob-se′qui-ous-ness.

o-dor-less (ō′dĕr-lĕs), adj. [see odor], without smell or fragrance. Also, o′dour-less.

o-dor-ous (ō′dĕr-ŭs), adj. giving out an odor or scent; fragrant. Also, o′dour-ous.—adv. o′dor-ous-ly.—n. o′dor-ous-ness.

Syn. odoriferous, redolent, fragrant, aromatic, perfumed. These words describe that which diffuses a scent. Odorous and odoriferous ordinarily refer to a sweet smell, though they may describe that which is disagreeable. Redolent applies to that which gives forth a strong smell; as, a room redolent of tobacco smoke; redolent is now chiefly used in its figurative sense; as, redolent with memories. Fragrant describes that which is sweet-smelling and sense-delighting in an exquisite way; as, fragrant odors drifted from the wistaria vine; fragrant flowers. Aromatic odors are spicy, pungent, and agreeable, as those of a pine forest, coffee, cinnamon. That is perfumed which smells sweet. Perfumed can be applied in an unfavorable sense as fragrant cannot; fragrance appeals to a refined taste, but perfume may be too strong to be pleasing.

o-pen (ō'pn), adj. [A.S. = lifted up, akin to ūp, up: meaning derived from idea of a curtain or tent door "lifted up," and therefore open], 1, not shut; unclosed; 2, unsealed or unstopped, as a letter or a bottle; 3, uncovered or exposed; as, an open boat; 4, not obstructed; as, a river open for navigation, 5, clear of trees; as, open country; 6, unfilled; unoccupied; disengaged; as, the position is still open; 7, undecided; as, an open question; 8, not settled or balanced; as, the account was left open for final receipts; 9, not surrounded by walls, shores, etc.; as, the open sea; 10, not frozen or frosty; free from ice and snow; as, an open winter; 11, unfolded or spread out; as, an open newspaper; 12, not hidden; in plain view; as, an open scandal; open lawlessness; unreserved; as, an open criticism; 13, public; free for all; as, an open meeting; open competition; 14, ready to hear or to receive suggestion; as, an open mind; ready to be affected, as by advice, argument, etc.; 15, generous; as, to give with an open hand; 16, frank; sincere; as, an open countenance; 17, having spaces, gaps, or holes, as certain needlework: Naut., not foggy or misty; Phon., 1, of vowel and consonant sounds, uttered with relatively unclosed position of the speaking parts specially concerned: opposite of narrow and closed; as, the vowel sound of see is closed, of saw is open; p is closed, f is open; 2, of syllables, not ending with a consonant, as in go, ba-by: opposite of closed, as in gaunt-let; Mus., designating a string which, not being stopped or shortened by a finger or mechanical device, vibrates over its entire length:—v.t. 1, to unclose or unlock, as a window or door; 2, to spread out, as a fan; 3, to break the seal of or untie, as an envelope or package; 4, to remove obstructions from; as, to open a road; 5, to begin; as, to open the discussion; 6, to put into operation; as, to open a store; 7, to reveal; expose; as, to open one's mind to a friend; 8, to pierce or make a hole in; 9, to offer for settlement, use, etc.; as, to open undeveloped land: Naut., to bring into view: Archaic, 1, to explain the meaning of; interpret; 2, to give light or knowledge to; as, he opened their understanding:—v.i. 1, to unclose itself; 2, to commence; 3, to lead; give; as, the door opens into the hall; 4, to expand; develop; 5, to become more clearly visible: Hunting, to bay when scenting game, as hounds:—n. 1, any wide space uninclosed and clear of trees, buildings, etc.: with the; 2, outdoors; 3, public view.—adv. o'pen-ly.—n. o'pen-ness.

Syn., adj. frank, candid, ingenuous, plain, artless, fair, sincere, aboveboard, truthful. An open countenance is a true index of what is going on behind it; an open statement keeps nothing back. A frank statement, while it lacks the nakedness of an open one, is yet blunt and true. Candid shares the disagreeable connotation of frank, though the motive behind candor is that of impartiality and fairness, rather than savage truthtelling. An ingenuous remark is naïve; the speaker is so innocent that his lack of experience or tact is indulgently forgiven or smiled at. Plain is allied to open, in that you cannot escape its meaning; plain speaking is unvarnished and discouragingly truthful; a plain direction is clear. Artless, like ingenuous, is undesigning and guileless in its disclosures.

par-o-dy (păr'ō-dĭ), n. [pl. -dies (-dĭz)], [< Gk. para, beside + ōidē, a song], an imitation, in humorous or ludicrous style, of a serious writing, as a poem or song; also, the class of literature to which such imitations belong:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -died (-dĭd), p.pr. -dying], to write a humorous burlesque of.

Syn., n. mimicry, exaggeration, imitation, representation, burlesque, caricature, travesty. Imitation is a serious attempt to reproduce an original. Burlesque, travesty, parody, and caricature pervert or exaggerate certain aspects of the original in order to deride or ridicule it. Burlesque and travesty may be written or acted; parody is written; caricature may be literary, but is usually pictorial. A burlesque obtains an extravagant or absurd effect, usually incongruous, by treating a serious subject with levity, or a trifling subject seriously. A burlesque may be written independently of any actual play, poem, etc., but even so it is imitative, presenting in an absurd way such a portrayal as the life of a countryman on his arrival in a big city. A caricature overemphasizes certain distinguishing marks or traits; caricatures of Theodore Roosevelt capitalized his smile and teeth; former President Wilson was made to look overbookish. A parody changes the subject matter of some work, usually well known, but retains the style, especially in its tricks or affectations. A travesty retains the subject matter, but so alters the style that the effect is ridiculous. Mimicry is such a copying of its original as to be comical through its very faithfulness. Both travesty and mimicry are sometimes the product of innocence rather than deliberate effort.

pa-role (pə-rōl′), n. [Fr. = word < L.L. parabolare, to talk], a word of honor: Mil., 1, a promise given by a prisoner of war that in return for conditional freedom he will not try to escape, will refrain from bearing arms against his captors, or will return to prison at a stated time; also, the condition of being on parole; 2, a special password used by officers in a camp or garrison: —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. paroled (-rōld′), p.pr. paroling], to release (a prisoner) on his word of honor to observe certain conditions: Mil., to set at liberty, as a prisoner of war, on his pledge of honor.

per-i-wig (pĕr'ĭ-wĭg), n. [see peruke], a head covering of false hair, imitating the natural hair, but thicker, formerly a conventional part of fashionable dress, and still worn by British lawyers and judges as part of the official costume; a peruke.

[1]per-i-win-kle (pĕr'ĭ-wĭng"kl), n. [<A.S. perrince<Lat. pervinca, periwinkle, perh. <per- (intensive)+vincire, to bind], any of a genus (Vinca) of creeping evergreen plants; especially, the common myrtle (V. minor), a creeping herb with oval, shiny, dark green leaves, and solitary blue, or sometimes white, flowers.

[2]per-i-win-kle (pĕr'ĭ-wĭng"kl), n. [perh.<A.S. winewincle, pinewincle, shellfish: wine- and pine- (<Lat. pina, mussel) changed by confusion with [1]periwinkle], any of various snails, especially any of a genus (Littorina) of marine forms, including an edible European species (L. littorea) introduced along the Atlantic shores of North America.

per-jure (pûr'jûr), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -jured (-jûrd), p.pr. -juring], [< O.F. parjurer, to swear falsely < Lat. per-, away entirely + jurare, to swear], to cause to swear falsely, or to break a vow; make guilty of false swearing: commonly used with reflexive pronoun; as, to perjure oneself.—p.adj. per'jured.—n. per'jur-er.

Syn. forswear. To forswear, now seldom used, is to reject or deny upon oath; as, to forswear wealth. To perjure oneself is to swear falsely under oath in a court of justice. Used reflexively, forswear is synonymous with perjure; as, he forswore himself for her sake.

per-ju-ry (pûr'jû-rĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], 1, Law, wilful assertion of a fact, made under oath, with knowledge that such assertion is false; 2, the wilful breaking of an oath or solemn promise.

perk (pûrk), v.t. [< M.E. perken, to preen], to make trim or neat:—v.i. 1, to hold up the head in a saucy manner; 2, to become jaunty: followed by up.

perk-y (pûr'kĭ), adj. jaunty; pert; smart; airy; lively.—adv. perk'i-ly.

per-lite (pûr'līt), n. [< Fr. perle, pearl], Geol., a pearly volcanic glass having an onionlike structure, or containing rounded crystalline masses; Metal., a compound or alloy of carbon and iron, having a pearly luster: a constituent of steel. Also, pearl'ite.

per-ma-nen-cy (pûr'mȧ-nĕn-sĭ), n. [pl. -cies (-sĭz)], [see permanent], 1, state of being permanent; 2, a thing that is lasting.

per-ma-nent (pûr'mȧ-nĕnt), adj. [< Lat. per- (intensive) + manens (-entis), remaining], lasting; fixed; continuing in the same state: permanent wave, a wave in the hair, produced artificially to last a considerable time: also called permanent.—n. per'ma-nence.—adv. per'ma-nent-ly.

Syn. stable, steadfast, changeless, perpetual, lasting, enduring, durable, fixed, invariable, unchangeable. That is permanent which is not temporary, not apt to change, is supposed to last, or does last, until the end; as, an annuity provides one with a permanent income; permanent institutions; permanent arrangements. Lasting may describe the eternal quality connoted by everlasting, and apply to the spiritual; as, the lasting blessedness of the peace of God; or it may be used, like permanent, in the sense of unchanging, and apply to the material; as, a lasting texture, color, structure, foundation. Durable is used entirely in the material sense, and connotes the wearing or lasting qualities of things; as, durable dress goods. Stable refers to what is firmly fastened in place; a desk which does not shake when leaned upon is stable. Enduring suggests the quality of wearing well; as, oak is an enduring wood; but it more frequently describes that quality which bears up under annoyance or suffering; as, enduring patience; it also applies in the sense of everlasting to that which is to continue forever; as, the enduring goodness of God.

per-man-ga-nate (pĕr-măng'gȧ-nāt), n. [per- + manganate (< Fr. manganèse, corr. < Lat. magnesia: see magnesia)], Chem., 1, a salt of permanganic acid; 2, specifically, potassium permanganate, a dark purple, crystalline salt with oxidizing properties, used in bleaching and as an antiseptic.

per-man-gan-ic ac-id (pûr'măn-găn'ĭk), Chem., an acid compound of manganese, with strong oxidizing properties.

per-me-a-bil-i-ty (pûr'mē-ȧ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [see permeate], the state or quality of being penetrable by fluids: Elec., the quality of being easily magnetized.

per-me-a-ble (pûr'mē-ȧ-bl), adj. capable of allowing penetration by fluids; porous.

per-me-am-e-ter (pûr'mē-ăm'ē-tẽr), n. [< Lat. permeare, to permeate + Gk. metron, a measure], Metal., an instrument for determining the magnetic properties of iron or other metals, especially permeability and magnetic induction: used for detecting flaws, blowholes, etc., in rails, bars, or the like, by variations in magnetic properties.

per-me-ate (pûr'mē-āt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], [< Lat. per, through + meare (-atus), to pass], 1, to pass through the pores or crevices of; 2, to spread through or mingle with.—n. per'me-a'tion.—adj. per'me-a-tive.

Per-mi-an (pûr'mĭ-ȧn), adj. [< Perm, province in Russia], Geol., designating, or pertaining to, the last period of the Paleozoic era, characterized by the culmination of the Appalachian uplift (see geology, chart):—n. the Permian period or system.

per-mis-si-ble (pẽr-mĭs'ĭ-bl), adj. [see permit], allowable; tolerable.—adv. per-mis'si-bly.—n. per-mis'si-bil'i-ty.

per-mis-sion (pẽr-mĭsh'ŭn), n. 1, the act of allowing; 2, leave; consent.

Syn. license, sufferance, consent, authority, allowance.—Ant. refusal, opposition, denial, prohibition.

per-mis-sive (pẽr-mĭs'ĭv), adj. giving consent; not forbidding; unopposed.

per-mit (pẽr-mĭt'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -mitted, p.pr. -mitting], [< Lat. permittere (-missus), to let go < per, through + mittere, to send], 1, to allow by not trying to prevent; consent to; tolerate; 2, to give leave to; authorize:—v.i. to give consent; allow; as, if the weather permits, I shall go:—n. (pûr'mĭt), an official written warrant or license.

Syn., v. suffer, empower, authorize. (See allow.)

per-mu-ta-tion (pûr'mū-tā'shŭn), n. [see permute], interchange; the exchange of one thing with another: Math., any of the ways in which a number of objects, letters, etc., may be arranged in definite order in a series; also, rearrangement to effect all possible variations in order of the elements of a series; as, the possible permutations of the elements a, b, c are abc, acb, bae, bca, cab, cba (see combination).

per-mute (pẽr-mūt'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -muted, p.pr. -muting], [< Lat. per- (intensive) + mutare (-atus), to change], to interchange: Math., to vary the order or sequence of (the elements of a series) so as to obtain all possible serial arrangements: used of letters, numbers, etc.—n. per'mu-ta'tor (pûr'mū-tā'tẽr).

per-mu-tite (pûr'mū-tīt; pẽr-mū'tīt; -tĭt), n. an artificially prepared zeolite; a hydrated sodium aluminum silicate, used in a certain process for softening water.

per-ni-cious (pẽr-nĭsh'ŭs), adj. [< Fr. pernicieux < Lat. pernicies, ruin < per- (intensive) + nex (necis), death], highly injurious or hurtful: pernicious anæmia, Pathol., a disease, usually fatal, characterized by a marked decrease of the red corpuscles in the blood: pernicious scale, the San José scale.—adv. per-ni'cious-ly.—n. per-ni'cious-ness.

Syn. deleterious, destructive, baneful, deadly, harmful, evil, ruinous.—Ant. beneficial, wholesome, good.

per-nick-et-y (pẽr-nĭk'ĕt-ĭ), adj. [source uncertain], Colloq., attentive to trifles; overnice; fussily particular.

per-o-rate (pẽr'ō-rāt), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -rated, p.pr. -rating], [< Lat. per, through + orare (-atus), to speak], 1, to discourse at length; 2, to sum up a speech in conclusion.

per-o-ra-tion (pẽr'ō-rā'shŭn), n. the summing up or conclusion of a speech or oration.

per-ox-ide (pẽr-ŏk'sīd; pẽr-ŏk'sĭd), n. [per- + oxide], Chem., an oxide, or compound of oxygen, which contains more oxygen than some other oxide of the same element; specifically, hydrogen peroxide: peroxide blonde, Slang, a person with hair bleached by the action of hydrogen peroxide. Also, per-ox'id.

per-pend (pẽr-pĕnd'), v.t. [< Lat. per- (intensive) + pendere, to weigh], Archaic, to weigh in the mind; ponder; consider.

per-pen-dic-u-lar (pûr'pĕn-dĭk'ū-lẽr), adj. [< Lat. perpendicularis < perpendiculum, plumb line < per-, thoroughly + pendere, to weigh, measure], 1, at right angles to a given line or surface; 2, perfectly upright:—n. 1, an upright line; 2, a line or plane at right angles to another; 3, a device for indicating the vertical line from any point.—adv. per'pen-dic'u-lar-ly.—n. per'pen-dic'u-lar'i-ty.

per-pe-trate (pûr'pẽ-trāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -trated, p.pr. -trating], [< Lat. per-, thoroughly + patrare (-atus), to effect], to do; perform; commit: usually in a bad sense; as, to perpetrate a crime.—n. per'pe-tra'tion.—n. per'pe-tra'tor.

per-pet-u-al (pẽr-pĕt'ū-ȧl), adj. [< Lat. perpetualis, continuous, perh. < per, through + petere, to seek], never-ceasing; continuous; endless; everlasting; unfailing; constant.—adv. per-pet'u-al-ly.

Syn. incessant, interminable, enduring. (See eternal.)

per-pet-u-ate (pẽr-pĕt'ū-āt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], [< Lat. perpetuare (-atus), to make continuous, perh. < per, through + petere, to seek], to make everlasting; keep from oblivion; preserve.—n. per-pet'u-a'tion.—n. per-pet'u-a'tor.

per-pe-tu-i-ty (pûr'pẽ-tū'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [see perpetual], 1, the state of being everlasting; 2, eternity; 3, something that lasts forever: Law, a perpetual limitation on the disposition of property: now generally illegal, limitation being commonly restricted by law to a specified period.

per-plex (pẽr-plĕks'), v.t. [< Lat. per-, thoroughly + plectere (plexus), to plait], 1, to make anxious; puzzle; distract; embarrass; 2, to make difficult to be understood; complicate; confuse.

Syn. confuse, confound, bewilder, puzzle, distract, involve, mystify. He is puzzled who is brought to a mental standstill by something complicated or baffling; we are puzzled over the demeanor of a friend who is effusively cordial one day and cool the next. He is perplexed who is not only puzzled but indecisive, doubtful, or in suspense as to what to do, think, or say. Difficulty or tendency puzzles; contradictions uncertainty perplex. To confuse one is to put his mental processes to rout; one confused cannot think or reason. One confounded is worse: he is overwhelmed utterly: he cannot, for the moment, even speak: his mind is paralyzed. Proof of the duplicity of a trusted friend might confound one. To bewilder is to plunge one into a dazed state in which the faculties are enervated, but not so utterly as in confusion: a child is bewildered when frightened on waking in a strange place at night. To mystify is to throw into confusion or bewilderment purposely, especially one prone to believe what most people would recognize as impossible: magicians mystify their bewildered audiences. To obstruct is to bewilder by dividing the attention, as by making conflicting claims upon it.—Ant. explain, expound, elucidate.

per-plex-i-ty (pĕr-plĕk'sĭ-tĭ), n. pl. -ties (-tĭz), 1, state of being anxious, confused, doubtful, or puzzled; 2, that which puzzles.

phiz (fĭz), n. [colloq. abbr. of physiognomy], Slang or Colloq., the face; also, facial expression.

phle-bi-tis (flĕ-bī′tĭs), n. [< Gk. phleps (phlebos), a vein], Pathol., inflammation of a vein.

phle-bot-o-mize (flĕ-bŏt′ō-mīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -mized (-mīzd), p.pr. -mizing], [see phlebotomy], to bleed (a person) surgically by opening a vein.—n. phle-bot′o-mist.

phle-bot-o-my (flĕ-bŏt′ō-mĭ), n. [< Gk. phleps (phlebos), a vein + -tomia, a cutting < temnein, to cut], Med., the act or practice of opening a vein to let blood; venesection.

Phleg-e-thon (flĕg′ē-thŏn; flĕj′-), n. [< Gk. phlegethōn, the flaming], Class. Myth., the river of fire in the lower world.

phlegm (flĕm), n. [< Gk. phlegma (-atos), inflammation, flame, humor < phlegein, to burn], 1, thick, stringy mucus discharged from the throat; 2, heaviness of disposition; apathy; also, coldness; calmness: Obs., in early physiology, of the four humors supposed to compose the blood, the cold and damp humor, causing apathy and dulness.—adj. phlegm′y.

phleg-mat-ic (flĕg-măt′ĭk), adj. sluggish; dull: not easily excited; cool; as, a phlegmatic temperament: Obs., causing, or like, phlegm. Also, phleg-mat′i-cal.—adv. phleg-mat′i-cal-ly.

phlo-ëm (flō′ĕm), n. [Ger. < Gk. phloos, bark], Bot., in higher plants, that portion of a vascular bundle having perforated or relatively thin-walled cells, and devoted to food carrying: distinguished from xylem (see vascular bundle, illus.).

phlo-gis-tic (flō-jĭs′tĭk), adj. [see phlogiston], Old Chem., pertaining to phlogiston or the belief in it; Pathol., inflamed; irritated: Obs., fiery.

phlo-gis-ton (flō-jĭs′tŏn), n. [Gk. < phlogizein, to set on fire < phlox, flame], Old Chem., a hypothetical element, supposed to be a constituent of all combustible substances.

phlox (flŏks), n. [Gk. = flame], any of a genus (Phlox) of annual and perennial herbs bearing showy clusters of flowers, the corolla of each flower resembling a slender tube spreading into a flat disk.

pho-bi-a (fō′bĭ-ă), n. [< Gk. phobos, fear], Psych., a morbid fear or dread.

phœ-be (fē′bē), n. [imit.: influenced in spelling by Phœbe], any of several American flycatchers (genus Sayornis), especially a species (S. phœbe) slightly larger than the song sparrow, with a plaintive note: also called pewee. Also, phe′be.

Phœ-be (fē′bē), n. [< Gk. phoibē, fem. of Phoibos, the shining one, Apollo], 1, Gk. Myth., Artemis, the goddess of the moon and of the chase: called by the Romans Diana; 2, the moon: a personification used in poetry. Also, Phe′be.

Phœ-bus (fē′bŭs), n. [< Gk. Phoibos, the shining one], Gk. Myth., Apollo: called Phœbus Apollo when regarded as the sun god: Poet., the sun.

Phœ-ni-cian (fē-nish′ăn), adj. [< Gk. Phoinikē, the land of palms], pertaining to ancient Phœnicia in Syria or to its people or their language:—n. 1, an inhabitant of Phœnicia; 2, the language of the people of Phœnicia. Also, Phe-ni′cian.

Phœ-nix (fē′nĭks), n. [< Gk. Phoinix, Phœnician; purple; phœnix], Egypt. Myth., a mythical bird, said to live five hundred years in the desert of Arabia, and, after being consumed by fire, to rise again, fresh and beautiful, from its own ashes: used as a symbol of immortal life. Also, Phe′nix.

pho-nau-to-graph (fō-nŏ′tō-grăf), n. [< Gk. phōnē, voice + autos, self + graphein, to write], 1, a device for recording sound vibrations in visible form; 2, a visible record of sound vibrations.—adj. pho-nau″to-graph′ic (-grăf′ĭk).

¹phone (fōn), n. [< Gk. phōnē, sound], a unit sound or sound element in speech.

²phone (fōn), n. [abbr. of telephone], Colloq., a telephone:—v.t. and v.i. [p.t. and p.p. phoned (fōnd), p.pr. phoning], Colloq., to telephone.

pho-net-ic (fō-nĕt′ĭk), adj. [< Gk. phōnētikos, belonging to speaking < phōnein, to speak], 1, pertaining to the voice or to speech sounds; 2, representing the simple speech sounds; as, phonetic spelling (see phonetic alphabet, App. I). Also, pho-net′i-cal.—adv. pho-net′i-cal-ly.

pho-ne-ti-cian (fō″nĕ-tĭsh′ăn), n. one skilled in the science of speech sounds.

pho-net-ics (fō-nĕt′ĭks), n.pl. used as sing. the science of the sounds of speech, and of the symbols that stand for them.

pho-ne-tist (fō′nĕ-tĭst), n. 1, one who is skilled in the science of sounds, especially of speech sounds; 2, one who is in favor of, or makes use of, spelling according to pronunciation.

phon-ic (fŏn′ĭk; fō′nĭk), adj. [< Gk. phōnē, voice], 1, of the nature of sounds, usually speech sounds; phonetic; 2, uttered with the voice.

phon-ics (fŏn′ĭks; fō′nĭks), n.pl. used as sing. the science of sounds, usually of vocal sounds, especially those of speech; phonetics.

pho-no-cin-e-mat-o-graph (fō″nō-sĭn″ē-măt′ō-grăf), n. [< Gk. phōnē, voice + kinēma, motion + graphein, to write], a device for presenting synchronized motion pictures and phonographic dialog: also called kinetophone.

pho-no-gram (fō′nō-grăm), n. [< Gk. phōnē, sound + gramma, a writing], 1, the record of sound produced by a phonograph; 2, any written character representing a speech sound.

pho-no-graph (fō′nō-grȧf), n. [< Gk. phōnē, voice + graphein, to write], 1, formerly, a letter or character indicating a distinct spoken sound; 2, an instrument to record and reproduce accurately speech, music, or other sounds.

a, disk record, on turntable; b, reproducer; c, tone arm; d, needle; e, sound box; f, winding crank.

pho-no-graph-ic (fō″nō-grȧf′ĭk), adj. 1, pertaining to, or representing, sounds; 2, pertaining to a phonograph or to phonography. Also, pho″no-graph′i-cal.—adv. pho″no-graph′i-cal-ly.

pho-nog-ra-phy (fō-nŏg′rȧ-fĭ), n. 1, a description of sounds uttered by the human voice; 2, a system of shorthand, by which every sound is represented by a distinctive character; 3, the art of making phonographs.—n. pho-nog′ra-pher.

pho-nol-o-gy (fō-nŏl′ō-jĭ), n. [< Gk. phōnē, voice + -logia, a study], the science of speech sounds, together with their history and their changes: Gram., that section of grammar which treats of the sounds and sound changes of a language.—adj. pho″no-log′ic; pho″no-log′i-cal.—n. pho-nol′o-gist.

pho-ny (fō′nĭ), adj. [source uncertain], Slang, counterfeit; as, phony money.

phos-gene (fŏs′jēn), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + -genēs, born], Chem., a colorless gas with the odor of musty hay, formed by the action of light on a mixture of carbon monoxide and chlorine: used in warfare as a poison gas. Also, phos′gen.

phos-phate (fŏs′fāt), n. [see phosphorus], 1, Chem., a salt of phosphoric acid; 2, any of various mineral substances consisting of salts of the acids of phosphorus: phosphate rock, any of several mineral phosphates used as sources of fertilizer.

phos-phide (fŏs′fīd; fŏs′fĭd), n. Chem., a compound of phosphorus with a basic element; as, phosphide of iron. Also, phos′phid.

phos-phite (fŏs′fīt), n. Chem., a salt or ester of phosphorous acid.

Phos-phor (fŏs′fôr), n. [< Gk. Phōsphoros, light bringer], the morning star, especially the planet Venus; Lucifer: phosphor, the element phosphorus: an old name: phosphor bronze, any one of a number of bronzes to which a small proportion of phosphorous alloy has been added to increase strength and hardness.

phos-phor-esce (fŏs″fôr-ĕs′), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -esced (-ĕst′), p.pr. -escing], [see phosphorus], to emit light without combustion or heat, as does the element phosphorus.

phos-phor-es-cence (fŏs″fôr-ĕs′ĕns), n. 1, the emission of light by certain bodies, such as phosphorus, decaying wood, and some insects and marine animals, resulting from slow oxidation or other chemical action; 2, the continued emission of light by some substances which have been exposed to light or other physical stimulus, after the stimulus has been removed, as distinguished from fluorescence, which refers to the emission during the stimulus; 3, the property of thus emitting light; 4, the light thus emitted.—adj. phos″phor-es′cent.

phos-phor-ic (fŏs-fôr′ĭk), adj. Chem., pertaining to, like, obtained from, or containing, phosphorus, especially in its higher valence.

phos-phor-ous (fŏs′fôr-ŭs; fŏs-fō′rŭs), adj. Chem., pertaining to, obtained from, or containing, phosphorus, especially in its lower valence.

phos-phor-us (fŏs′fôr-ŭs), n. [Lat. < Gk. phōs, light + -phoros, bringing < pherein, to bring], Chem., a widely distributed and important nonmetallic element [symbol P], occurring in rocks, soil, animal tissue, and manufactured commercially from bones; a yellowish white, waxy, poisonous substance with an unpleasant odor, luminous in the dark and igniting spontaneously when warm: used in making matches, in rat poison, as a deoxidizer, and in medicine: red phosphorus, an altered form of phosphorus obtained by heating to 240° C.: not poisonous and not luminous.

phos-phu-ret-ed (fŏs′fū-rĕt″ĕd), adj. [< obs. phosphuret, phosphide], combined with phosphorus; as, phosphureted hydrogen. Also, phos′phu-ret″ted.

phot (fŏt; fōt), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light], the C. G. S. unit of illumination, equal to one lumen per square centimeter, or the illumination equal to that produced upon a surface by a uniform point source of one international candle one centimeter distant.

pho-tic (fō′tĭk), adj. pertaining to light and the production of light: photics, n.pl. used as sing. the science of light.

pho-to (fō′tō), n. [colloq. abbr. of photograph], Colloq., a photograph: popular abbreviation.

pho-to-chem-i-cal (fō″tō-kĕm′ĭ-kȧl), adj. [photo- (< Gk. phōs, light) + chemical], 1, pertaining to, or produced by, the chemical action of light; 2, pertaining to photochemistry.

pho-to-chem-is-try (fō″tō-kĕm′ĭs-trĭ), n. [photo- (< Gk. phōs, light) + chemistry], that branch of chemistry which treats of the relations of light and chemical change.

pho-to-chro-mog-ra-phy (fō″tō-krō-mŏg′rȧ-fĭ), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + khrōma, color + graphein, to write], Print., the process of reproducing photographs in colors.

pho-to-chro-mo-scope (fō″tō-krō′mō-skōp), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + khrōma, color + skopein, to look], a device by which objects are photographed in their natural colors.

pho-to-chro-my (fō′tō-krō″mĭ), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + khrōma, color], the art or process of taking photographs in natural colors.

pho-to-chron-o-graph (fō″tō-krŏn′ō-grȧf), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + khronos, time + graphein, to write], 1, an instrument for photographing objects in motion at regulated short intervals of time; 2, a photograph so taken; 3, an instrument which records the duration of an occurrence photographically.

pho-to-chro-nog-ra-phy (fō″tō-krō-nŏg′rȧ-fĭ), n. the process of photographing objects in motion at regulated, usually extremely short, intervals of time.

pho-to-e-lec-tric (fō″tō-ē-lĕk′trĭk), adj. Phys., pertaining to relations of light and electricity, or to photography by electric light.

pho-to-e-lec-tric-i-ty (fō″tō-ē-lĕk-trĭs′ĭ-tĭ), n. Elec., electricity produced or affected by the action of light.

pho-to-e-lec-tron (fō″tō-ē-lĕk′trŏn), n. [photo- (< Gk. phōs, light) + electron], Phys., an electron liberated from a metallic surface by the incidence of a beam of light.

pho-to-en-grave (fō″tō-ĕn-grāv′), v.t. to reproduce by photo-engraving.

pho-to-en-grav-ing (fō″tō-ĕn-grāv′ĭng), n. 1, a process by which a photograph is reproduced in relief upon a metal plate, for printing; 2, a picture printed from such a plate.

pho-to-graph (fō′tō-grȧf), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + graphein, to write], a picture produced by exposing to the action of the actinic rays of light a plate or film, sensitized, or coated with certain chemicals:—v.t. to take a picture of, by exposing a sensitized plate or film to the action of the actinic rays of light:—v.i. to practice the art of photography.—n. pho-tog′ra-pher (fō-tŏg′rȧ-fẽr).

pho-to-graph-ic (fō″tō-grȧf′ĭk), adj. 1, pertaining to, or made by, the exposure of a sensitized plate or film to the action of light; 2, reproducing life or nature in all its details.

pho-tog-ra-phy (fō-tŏg′rȧ-fĭ), n. the art or process of making pictures by the action of light on surfaces coated with certain chemicals.

pho-to-gra-vure (fō″tō-grȧ-vūr′; fō″tō-grā′vûr), n. [Fr. < Gk. phōs, light + Fr. gravure, engraving], 1, any one of several processes for printing pictures from an intaglio plate prepared photographically; 2, a picture so printed.

pho-to-he-li-o-graph (fō″tō-hē′lĭ-ō-grȧf), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + hēlios, sun + graphein, to write], an instrument for photographing the sun, as during an eclipse.

pho-to-lith-o-graph (fō″tō-lith′ō-grȧf), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + lithos, stone + graphein, to write], a picture, often in colors, printed from a smooth, flat, porous surface of stone or other material, of a design which has been transferred to the surface by photography, the method being to apply grease and water in such a way that when the whole surface is inked only certain parts will take the ink.—n. pho″to-li-thog′ra-phy.—adj. pho″to-lith″o-graph′ic.

pho-tol-y-sis (fō-tŏl′ĭ-sĭs), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + lusis, a loosening], Chem., chemical change brought about by the action of light.

pho-to-me-chan-i-cal (fō″tō-mē-kăn′ĭ-kȧl), adj. [photo- (< Gk. phōs, light) + mechanical], pertaining to the mechanical printing of pictures from plates made photographically.

pho-tom-e-ter (fō-tŏm′ē-tẽr), n. [< Gk. phōs, light + metron, a measure], an instrument by which the intensity of light is measured.

pho-tom-e-try (fō-tŏm'ē-trĭ), n. the art or science of measuring the intensity of light. —adj. pho"to-met'ric.

pho-to-mi-cro-graph (fō"tō-mī'krō-grăf), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + mikros, small + graphein, to write], 1, a photograph of a minute object greatly magnified, made by attaching a camera to a microscope; 2, a photograph of an object reduced to extremely small size. Also called microphotograph; photomicrogram.

pho-to-mi-cro-scope (fō"tō-mī'krō-skōp), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + mikros, small + skopein, to look], a microscope combined with a camera, for taking photomicrographs.

pho-ton (fō'tŏn), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light], a quantum, or unit particle, of light; a minute particle of freely moving energy traveling at the velocity of light.

pho-to-phone (fō'tō-fōn), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + phōnē, voice], an instrument for communicating sound by means of light.

pho-to-play (fō'tō-plā"), n. [photo + play], 1, a motion-picture play; 2, a play for exhibition by motion pictures.

pho-to-sphere (fō'tō-sfēr), [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + sphaira, globe], Astron., the luminous, incandescent surface of the sun, being the surface ordinarily seen from the earth.

Pho-to-stat (fō'tō-stăt), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + Lat. stare (status), to stand], a trade-mark for a type of camera used for photographing documents, etc., directly upon the surface of prepared paper; also, a photograph made with such a camera.

pho-to-syn-the-sis (fō"tō-sĭn'thē-sĭs), n. [< Gk. phōs (phōtos), light + sun, together + thesis < tithenai, to put], Bot., the natural process of combining water and carbonic acid gas to form sugars and starches in the green plant tissue under the influence of light and in the presence of chlorophyll, the green coloring substance.—adj. pho"to-syn-thet'ic.

pho-to-type (fō'tō-tīp), n. [photo + type], 1, a block on whose surface a photograph is so reproduced that it can be printed; 2, the process of preparing such a block; 3, a picture made from it.

phrase (frāz), n. [< Gk. phrasis, speech < phrazein, to speak], 1, any brief pithy expression containing a single idea; 2, a characteristic style or manner of speech, either of an individual or of a certain language or people: Gram., a group of related words not containing a subject and a predicate; Mus., a portion of a theme or melody, generally four measures in length, having a certain balance within itself, but incomplete without the remainder of the theme:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. phrased (frāzd), p.pr. phrasing], to put into words, especially into suitable words.

phra-se-ol-o-gy (frā"zē-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [< Gk. phrasis, speech + -logia, a study], style, manner, or peculiarity of expression.—n. phra"se-ol'o-gist.—adj. phra"se-o-log'i-cal.

Syn. language, style. (See diction.)

phra-try (frā'trĭ), n. [pl. -tries (-trĭz)], [< Gk. phratria < phratēr, a clansman], Gk. Antiq., in ancient Athens, a subdivision of a tribe or family.

phre-net-ic (frē-nĕt'ĭk), adj. [< O.F. < Gk. phrenitikos < phrenitis, delirium], 1, eccentric; mad; insane; 2, frantic; wild. Also, fre-net'ic.

phren-ic (frĕn'ĭk), adj. [< Gk. phrēn, mind; diaphragm], 1, pertaining to the mind; 2, pertaining to the diaphragm; diaphragmatic.

phre-ni-tis (frē-nī'tĭs), n. [Gk. = delirium < phrēn, the mind], Pathol., inflammation of the brain; brain fever.—adj. phre-nit'ic (frē-nĭt'ĭk).

phre-nol-o-gy (frē-nŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [< Gk. phrēn, mind + -logia, a study], a system of character reading based on the theory that one's character is shown by the form of the skull (see illus. next column).—adj. phren"o-log'i-cal.—n. phre-nol'o-gist.

Phrix-us (frĭk'sŭs), n. [< Gk. Phrixos], Gk. Myth., a Grecian prince who, condemned to be sacrificed to Zeus, rode away through the air with his sister, Helle, on the ram which bore the Golden Fleece, Helle, however, falling off the ram into the Hellespont.

Phryg-i-an (frĭj'ĭ-ăn), adj. [< Phrygia], of or pertaining to Phrygia, an ancient country in Asia Minor, or its people:—n. 1, an inhabitant of Phrygia; 2, the language of this country.

phthal-e-in (thăl'ē-ĭn; fthăl'-), n. [(na)phthal(ene) + -in], Chem., any of several synthetic dyes, having intense colors, made from phenols.

phthi-sis (thī'sĭs), n. [Gk. < phthinein, to decay], Pathol., 1, a wasting away of the body or a part of the body; 2, especially, tuberculosis of the lungs; consumption. Also, phthis'ic (tĭz'ĭk).—adj. phthis'i-cal (tĭz'ĭ-kăl).—adj. phthis'ick-y.

phy-lac-ter-y (fĭ-lăk'tĕr-ĭ), n. [pl. -teries (-Iz)], [< Gk. phulaktērion, amulet < phulassein, to guard < phulax, a guard], a charm or talisman: Jewish Antiq., a small square box containing a thin strip of parchment upon which certain texts from the law were inscribed, and worn during prayer by pious Jews, one upon the forehead and one upon the left wrist.

Phyl-lis (fĭl'ĭs), n. [< Gk. Phullis], in Vergil's "Eclogues," a rustic maiden: Poet., a name for a country girl: often, Phillis.

phyl-lo-clade (fĭl'ō-klād), n. [< Gk. phullon, leaf + klados, a sprout], Bot., any flattened stem, branch, etc., which functions as a leaf.

phyl-lode (fĭl'ōd), n. [< Gk. phullōdēs, leaflike < phullon, leaf + eidos, form], Bot., a flat, outspread petiole, or leafstalk, that takes the place of, and functions as, a leaf. Also, phyl-lo'di-um.

phyl-lo-pod (fĭl'ō-pŏd), n. [< Gk. phullon, leaf + pous (podos), foot], Zoöl., any of an order (Phyllopoda) of small crustaceans having leaflike feet.—adj. phyl-lop'o-dal (fĭ-lŏp'ō-dăl).

phyl-lo-tax-is (fĭl"ō-tăk'sĭs), n. [< Gk. phullon, leaf + taxis, arrangement], Bot.,

DIAGRAM OF PHYLLOTAXIS

1, opposite; 2, whorled; 3, alternate, ½ spiral; 4, alternate, ²/₅ spiral; 5, alternate, ⅓ spiral.

the system of arrangement of leaves on a stem; also, the order of their arrangement. Also, phyl'lo-tax'y.

phyl-lox-e-ra (fĭl"ŏk-sē'rä), n. [< Gk. phullon, leaf + xēros, dry], any of a genus (Phylloxera) of plant lice, some infesting grapevines.

phy-log-e-ny (fī-lŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [pl. -nies (-nĭz)], [< Gk. phulon, race + genesis, origin], Biol., the history or development of a race, type, species, etc. Also, phy"lo-gen'e-sis (-lō-jĕn'ē-sĭs).—adj. phy"lo-gen'ic; phy"lo-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk).

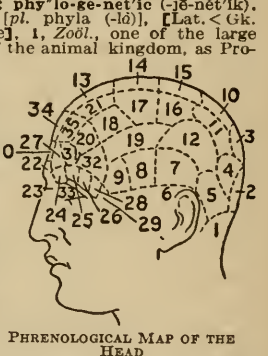
phy-lum (fī'lŭm), n. [pl. phyla (-lä)], [Lat. < Gk. phulon, race], 1, Zoöl., one of the large fundamental divisions of the animal kingdom, as Protozoa, Mollusca, etc.; 2, Bot., a similar fundamental division of plants, as Thallophyta, Pteridophyta, etc.: a term used by some, but not all, botanists.

phys-ic (fĭz'ĭk), n. [< Gk. physikē (epistēmē), (knowledge) of nature < physis, nature], 1, the science of medicine, or the art of healing; 2, medicine in general; 3, a cathartic:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -icked (-ĭkt), p.pr. -icking], to administer medicine, especially a cathartic, to; to purge.



PHRENOLOGICAL MAP OF THE HEAD

Inclinations: 1, amativeness; 2, parental love; 3, inhabitiveness; 4, friendship; 5, combativeness; 6, destructiveness; 7, secretiveness; 8, acquisitiveness; 9, constructiveness. Sentiments: 10, self-esteem; 11, approbativeness; 12, cautiousness; 13, benevolence; 14, veneration; 15, firmness; 16, conscientiousness; 17, hope; 18, spirituality; 19, ideality; 20, mirthfulness; 21, imitativeness. Perspective faculties: 22, individuality (observation, desire to see and examine); 23, form (memory of shapes, faces); 24, size; 25, tangibility; 26, color; 27, locality; 28, calculation (ability in mental arithmetic); 29, order; 30, eventuality; 31, time; 32, tune; 33, language. Reflective qualities: 34, comparison; 35, causality.

phys-i-cal (fĭz'ĭ-kăl), adj. 1, relating to nature or natural science; 2, material as opposed to moral or spiritual; 3, pertaining to the body: Obs. or Rare, medical; healing.—adv. phys'i-cal-ly.

Syn. (see 3corporal).—Ant. unreal, spiritual.

phy-si-cian (fĭ-zĭsh'-ăn), n. [< M.E. and O.F. fisicien: see physic], one skilled in the art of healing and legally qualified to treat diseases; a doctor of medicine.

phys-i-cist (fĭz'ĭ-sĭst), n. [see physic], a student or specialist in physics.

phys-ics (fĭz'ĭks), n.pl. used as sing. the science which treats of matter and energy, especially such changes of matter and energy as do not involve changes in the composition of substances; the study of mechanics, heat, sound, light, electricity, etc.

phys-i-og-no-mist (fĭz"ĭ-ŏg'nō-mĭst), n. [see physiognomy], one skilled in the study of determining character from the structure and characteristic expression of the face.

phys-i-og-no-my (fĭz"ĭ-ŏg'nō-mĭ), n. [pl. -mies (-mĭz)], n. [< M.E. fisnomye < L.L. phisonomia < Gk. phusiognōmonia < phusis, nature + gnōmōn, a judge], 1, the art of reading in the face the qualities of the mind; 2, the face as expressive of character; 3, outward appearance.

plan (plăn), n. [Fr. < Lat. planus, flat], 1, a drawing on a flat surface, showing the outline, design, or relation between the parts of anything; a diagram, especially, an architect's drawing of the horizontal section of a building: called, specifically, floor plan; 2, the arrangement of parts according to a fixed design; 3, a scheme or project; 4, a method of procedure: pl. the working drawings, as of a house, including elevations, floor plans, and detailed drawings:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. planned (plănd), p.pr. planning], 1, to make a sketch of; outline; 2, to arrange beforehand:—v.i. to scheme; make an arrangement beforehand.—n. plan'ner.

Syn., n. project, purpose, sketch. (See design, scheme.)

planch-et (plăn'chĕt; plăn'shĕt), n. [Fr., dim. of planche, plank], a flat piece of metal, especially a piece prepared to be stamped as a coin.

plan-chette (plăn-shĕt'; -chĕt'; plăn"shĕt'), n. a small heart-shaped board resting on three supports, one of them a pencil which traces marks on a paper, as the board, with the hands of two persons resting lightly upon it, moves without conscious effort on their part (see ouija, illus.).

[1]plane (plān), n. [Fr. < L.L. plana, carpenter's tool < Lat. planare, to plane < planus, flat], a carpenter's tool for smoothing wood:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. planed (plānd), p.pr. planing], to make smooth or even with such a tool: Obs., 1, to blot out; remove; 2, to explain:—v.i. to work with a plane.

[2]plane (plān), adj. [< Lat. planus, flat], flat; level: even; without irregularities of surface: Geom., lying wholly in a plane; as, a plane curve:—n. 1, Geom., a surface such that if any two points in it are joined by a straight line, the line will lie wholly in the surface; 2, any flat or even surface; 3, a grade or level: Aëro., one of the flat supporting surfaces of an airplane.

[3]plane (plān), n. [< Lat. platanus < Gk. platanos, the plane tree < platus, broad: with ref. to its broad leaves], any of a genus (Platanus) of large trees with broad leaves, including the American sycamore, or buttonwood (P. occidentalis): also called plane tree.

[4]plane (plān), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. planed (plānd), p.pr. planing], [< earlier plane, to fly with outstretched wings < Fr. planer, to make flat: because the wings when outstretched are flat], to rise partly out of the water while moving, in the manner of a hydroplane.

plan-er (plān'ẽr), n. [see [1]plane], a machine for smoothing the surface of wood or metal.

plan-et (plăn'ĕt), n. [< L.L. planeta < Gk. planētēs, wanderer; planet], Astron., any one of the larger celestial bodies of the solar system, revolving round the sun in a nearly circular orbit and shining by reflected light: distinguished from the stars; Astrol., any heavenly body regarded as influencing the affairs of men: inferior planet, superior planet, a planet whose orbit lies inside the orbit of the earth, as Mercury or Venus, or outside the orbit of the earth, as Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, or Neptune: minor planet, one of the very small planets whose orbits lie between those of Mars and Jupiter; an asteroid.

Common type: A, bed; B, platen; C, gear driving platen; D, driving pulley; E, tool head; F, cross-feed screw; G, return pulley; H, H, reversing dogs; J, belt-shifting lever; J, belt shifters; K, vertical guide.

plane ta-ble an instrument for topographic surveying, consisting essentially of a drawing board and an alidade, or straight edge for ruling surmounted by a telescope: used in the field in map making to plot locations of outstanding points by triangulation (cf. triangulation, illus.).

plan-e-ta-ri-um (plăn"ẽ-tā'rĭ-ŭm), n. [pl. -ria (-ȧ)], [< L.L. planetarius, of a planet], 1, an astronomical contrivance by which are shown the planets, their motions round the sun, and their relative distances and size; an orrery (which see for illus.); 2, an instrument by which spots of light, representing heavenly bodies and moving appropriately, are projected upon the inner surface of a dome representing the sky.

plan-et-a-ry (plăn'ĕt-ă-rĭ), adj. 1, Astron., of or pertaining to a planet or the planets; 2, having the character attributed to a planet; that is, erratic or wandering; 3, Astrol., produced by, or under the influence of, a planet or planets.

plan-et-es-i-mal (plăn"ĕt-ĕs'ĭ-măl), adj. [< planet, by influence of infinitesimal], Astron., pertaining to a minute planet or planetary body: planetesimal hypothesis, a theory of the formation of the solar system, deriving it from a central sun surrounded by a large number of minute planetary bodies which have combined into the larger planets: superseding the older nebular hypothesis of Laplace.

plan-et-oid (plăn'ĕt-oid), n. [< Gk. planētēs, planet + eidos, form], one of the group of small planets whose orbits lie between those of Mars and Jupiter: a minor planet: also called asteroid.

plan-et-strick-en (plăn'ĕt-strĭk"n), adj. affected by the supposed influence of planets; blasted; hence, terrified.—adj. plan'et-struck".

plan-gent (plăn'jĕnt), adj. [< Lat. plangens (-entis), beating the breast < plangere, to beat the breast], 1, dashing with a loud noise, as a wave; 2, reverberating; resounding.

pla-nim-e-ter (plă-nĭm'ẽ-tẽr), n. [< Lat. planus, flat + Gk. metron, a measure], an instrument by which the area of a plane figure, regular or irregular, is directly ascertained by tracing the perimeter of the figure to be measured.

pla-nim-e-try (plă-nĭm'ẽ-trĭ), n. the geometrical measurement of plane surfaces.—adj. pla"ni-met'ric (plă"nĭ-mĕt'rĭk; plăn'ĭ-).

plan-ish (plăn'ĭsh), v.t. [< O.F. planir, to smooth], 1, in metal working, to polish or smooth by hammering; 2, in woodworking, to make smooth.

plan-i-sphere (plăn'ĭ-sfẽr), n. [[2]plane + sphere], 1, a map of a sphere, as of the earth, projected on a flat surface; 2, especially, a map of the celestial sphere so constructed as to show the constellations visible at any given time.

plank (plăngk), n. [< O.N.F. planke < L.L. planca, plank < Gk. plax, flat plate], 1, a long, broad piece of sawed timber thicker than a board; 2, a support: Politics, an item in the platform of a party;—v.t. 1, to cover with thick boards; 2, to broil on a board; as, to plank steak: Colloq., to lay down, as on a plank; hence, to pay; as, to plank down money.

plank-ing (plăngk'ĭng), n. 1, sawed timber suitable for floors, or the like; 2, a bare, rough board floor, platform, or other structure.

plank-ton (plăngk'tŏn), n. [< Gk. plagktos, wandering], the drifting fauna and flora of the surface of the ocean: opposite of benthos.

pla-no-con-cave (plā"nō-kŏn'kāv), adj. plane or flat on one side, and hollow and curved on the other (for illus. see lens).

pla-no-con-vex (plā"nō-kŏn'vĕks), adj. plane or flat on one side, and convex or bulging, on the other (for illus. see lens).

pla-nom-e-ter (plă-nŏm'ẽ-tẽr), n. [< Lat. planus, flat + Gk. metron, a measure], Mech., a flat, iron plate used for testing the flatness of plane surfaces; surface plate.—n. pla-nom'e-try.

plant (plănt), n. [< Lat. planta, a plant; sole of foot], 1, a vegetable organism; a member of the vegetable kingdom: frequently restricted to smaller members of the vegetable kingdom; an herb; 2, a sprout or young shoot ready for transplanting; 3, the tools, machinery, fixtures, and, sometimes, buildings, of any trade or business; as, a manufacturing plant; 4, the total equipment necessary for the conduct of any institution, as a college or hospital: Slang, a trick; snare; trap:—v.t. 1, to put in the ground for growth; as, to plant seed; 2, to provide or prepare with seeds, roots, etc.; as, to plant a garden; 3, to fix firmly; place; 4, to found; establish, as a colony: Slang, to conceal, for the purpose of tricking or trapping someone.

Plan-tag-e-net (plăn-tăj'ẽ-nĕt), n. [< Lat. planta genista, sprig of broom], one of the family to which belonged the kings of England from Henry II to Richard III (1154–1485): so called from a sprig of broom worn in his bonnet by Geoffrey of Anjou, the founder of the family.

[1]plan-tain (plăn'tăn; plăn'tĭn), n. [< Sp. plátano, plane tree], a tropical, broad-leaved tree of the banana family, yielding a long fruit somewhat larger, but less sweet, than the common banana. Also, plain'tain.

[2]plan-tain (plăn'tăn; -tĭn), n. [M.E. < O.E. < Lat. plantago (-ĭnis), plantain < planta, sole of foot], any of a genus (Plantago) of stemless herbs, especially a common weed (P. major), troublesome in lawns, having a rosette of broad leaves and central stalks bearing many seeds (for illus. see inflorescence).

plan-tar (plăn'tẽr), adj. [< Lat. planta, sole of the foot], Anat. and Zoöl., pertaining to the sole of the foot; as, plantar tendons (see foot, illus.).

plan-ta-tion (plăn-tā'shŭn), n. [< Lat. plantatio (-onis) < planta, slip; cutting], 1, a place where anything is sowed or set in the ground and cultivated; as, a plantation of trees; an oyster plantation; 2, in southern countries, especially in America, a large estate where cotton, sugar, etc., are cultivated, usually by Negro labor; 3, a new settlement or colony.

plan-ti-grade (plăn'tĭ-grād), adj. [< Lat. planta, sole + gradus, walking], Zoöl., walking on the entire under part of the foot, as do men and the bears:—n. an animal that walks in this manner.

plant-let (plănt'lĕt), n. [dim. of plant, q.v.], a small or very young plant.

plant louse a small, juice-sucking, parasitic insect, infesting plants (see Hemiptera, illus.).

plaque (plăk), n. [Fr. < Flem. placke, a small coin], 1, a flat, thin piece of metal or earthenware upon which a picture or design is enameled: used chiefly as a wall ornament; 2, a brooch or similar ornament.

[1]plash (plăsh), v.t. [imit.], to splash or dash with water:—v.i. to splash:—n. 1, the sound of splashing water; 2, a quick fall of rain.—adj. plash'y.

[2]plash (plăsh), v.t. [< O.F. plaissier < Lat. plectere, to plait], to bend down and interweave the branches or twigs of; as, to plash a hedge.

[3]plash (plăsh), n. [imit.], a puddle; a small pool of water.—adj. plash'y.

plasm (plăzm), n. [see plasma], Biol., in general, the more fluid substances of a cell: usually as a suffix; as, cyto*plasm*.

plas-ma (plăz'mȧ), n. [Lat. = a thing molded < Gk. plassein, to mold], Biol., 1, the liquid portion of various animal tissues: especially, the fluid part of the blood exclusive of the corpuscles, and the fluid in muscle, known as muscle plasma; 2, formerly, protoplasm; Mineral., a grass-green variety of quartz.

plas-ter (plăs'tẽr), n. [< L.L. emplastrum < Gk. emplastron, plaster < en, on + plassein, to mold], 1, a mixture of lime, sand, and water, with or without hair for binding, used for coating walls and partitions of buildings; 2, calcined gypsum, or plaster of Paris: Med., a substance with medicinal properties, adhesive when softened by bodily heat, which is spread upon cloth and applied to some part of the body as a remedy; as, a porous plaster: plaster board, a thin board composed of plaster and paper in alternate layers, used in building: plaster of Paris, calcined gypsum or calcium sulphate, mixed with water into a thin paste which soon hardens: used for finishing walls, for making moldings, statuettes, casts, etc., and for filling cracks and cavities:—v.t. 1, to overlay or cover with, or as with, a mixture of lime, sand, and water; as, to plaster the walls; 2, to hide, as a defect, with, or as with, such a mixture; 3, to treat with plaster of Paris, as vines, wine, etc.: Med., to treat with a cloth coated with a medicinal mixture.—n. plas'ter-er.

plas-ter-ing (plăs'tẽr-ĭng), n. 1, the act of putting on plaster or a plaster; 2, a covering of lime, sand, and water for a wall, ceiling, etc.

plas-tic (plăs'tĭk), adj. [< Lat. plasticus < Gk. plassein, to mold], 1, capable of being formed or molded; as, clay is plastic; 2, giving form to matter; as, plastic art; 3, quick to receive impressions; as, a plastic mind; 4, of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, molding or modeling; sculptural: plastic surgery, surgery for the restoration of deformed or mutilated parts of the body.—adv. plas'ti-cal-ly.—n. plas-tic'i-ty.

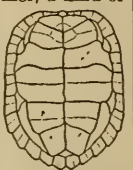
plas-tid (plăs'tĭd), n. Biol., a cell; also, a small granule of specialized protoplasm in the cytoplasm of certain cells.

plas-tron (plăs'trŏn), n. [Fr. = breastplate: see plaster], 1, in medieval armor, a kind of steel breastplate; 2, a decorative addition to the front of a woman's waist; 3, a leather breastplate of a fencer; 4, a starched shirt front: Zoöl., the under, or ventral, part of the shell of a turtle.



PLASTRON OF A TORTOISE

[1]plat (plăt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. platted, p.pr. platting], [see plait], to braid; plait:—n. a braid.

[2]plat (plăt), n. [var. of plot, q.v.], 1, a small piece of ground; a plot; 2, a plan, map, etc.:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. platted, p.pr. platting], to map.

plat-an (plăt'ăn), n. [< Lat. < Gk. platanos, plane], a plane tree.

plate (plāt), n. [< Fr. plat, plate, perh. < Gk. platus, flat; broad], 1, a thin, flat piece of some, usually a rigid, substance, as glass or metal; 2, a sheet of metal used for armor; also, armor made of metal sheets; 3, a piece of metal on which something is engraved or printed; as, a door*plate;* 4, a metal surface engraved with something drawn or written from which a print is to be made; also, the print so made; 5, metallic ware overlaid with gold or silver; 6, tableware of gold or silver; 7, a shallow, usually circular, dish from which food is eaten; also, as much as this dish will hold; 8, portions and service for one person at a table; 9, a thin piece of rubber, metal, etc., supporting artificial teeth: Baseball, the home base, a pentagonal piece of rubber: also called home plate or home; Print., a reproduction on a single sheet of metal of a section, as a page, of composed type: made by electrotype or stereotype process; also, a full-page illustration; Arch., a horizontal timber upon which the lower ends of rafters are set: Elec., the anode of a vacuum tube; an electrode in a storage battery; Photog., a sheet of glass chemically coated, on which the picture is taken: Obs., a silver coin:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. plated, p.pr. plating], 1, to coat with metal; 2, to cover with sheets of metal: Print., to make an electrotype or a stereotype plate of.

pla-teau (plă-tō'), n. [pl. -teaus, -teaux (-tōz')], [Fr. < O.F. platel, flat piece of wood, metal, land: dim. of plat, flat < Gk. platus, broad], 1, Geog., a broad, elevated tract of flat land; table-land; 2, on a military map, a flat surface on top of a hill.

plate-ful (plāt'fo͝ol), n. [pl. platefuls (-fo͝olz)], [see plate], as much as will fill a plate.

plate glass a thick glass, rolled in plates, ground flat, and polished on both sides.

plat-en (plăt'ĕn), n. [< Fr. platine, a flat object < plat < Gk. platus, flat], 1, in a printing press, the flat part which brings the paper against the type; 2, in a typewriter, the roller around which the paper is placed, and against which the type strikes.

plat-form (plăt'fôrm″), n. [< Fr. plateforme, flat form; ground plan], 1, a floor of wood, stone, etc., raised above the level of the ground or of the main floor; especially, a stage for public speaking; 2, the principles and policies, as of a political party.

plat-ing (plāt'ĭng), n. [see plate], 1, the art of overlaying anything with a thin sheet or coating of metal; 2, a coating of metal or of thin metal sheets.

plat-i-nize (plăt'ĭ-nīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -nized (-nīzd), p.pr. -nizing], [see platinum], to cover, treat, or unite with platinum.

plat-i-noid (plăt'ĭ-noid), adj. resembling platinum: —n. 1, one of the metals with which platinum is usually found associated, as palladium, rhodium, etc.; 2, an alloy of nickel, copper, zinc, and tungsten, resembling platinum in color, used for inexpensive jewelry, and, because of its resistance, in the manufacture of electrical appliances.

plat-i-num (plăt'ĭ-nŭm), n. [< Sp. platina, dim. of plata, silver], Chem., a rare, heavy, grayish white metallic element [symbol Pt], especially ductile and malleable, fused with great difficulty, and unattacked by oxygen and most acids: extensively used for chemical utensils and for jewelry: platinum black, a dull black powder consisting of finely divided platinum: used as a catalyst and oxidizing agent: platinum sponge, metallic platinum in the form of a loose, spongy mass, which absorbs gases to a marked degree: used in chemical research. Also, formerly, plat'i-na (plăt'ĭ-nă; plă-tē'nă).—adj. plat'i-nous.

plat-i-tude (plăt'ĭ-tūd), n. [Fr. = flatness < plat < Gk. platus, flat], 1, commonplaceness; dulness; flatness; 2, a truism; a trite or commonplace remark, especially if uttered as novel or original.

plat-i-tu-di-nous (plăt″ĭ-tū'dĭ-nŭs), adj. commonplace; dull; flat; trite.

po-lar (pō'lär), adj. [see [1]pole], 1, pertaining to, or situated near, either end of the axis of the earth; as, the polar regions; 2, pertaining to either of the opposite points of greatest force in a magnetic field: polar bear, a large bear (Ursus maritimus), creamy white in color, of the arctic regions: polar distance, Solid Geom., the angular distance of a point on a sphere from a pole, measured by the arc of the great circle passing through both.

po-lar-im-e-ter (pō"lär-ĭm'ē-tĕr), n. [<L.L. polaris, polar + Gk. metron, a measure], Optics, an instrument for measuring the properties of polarized light and the effect upon it of different materials.

Po-la-ris (pō-lā'rĭs), n. [<Lat. polus, end of axis; polestar], Astron., the polestar, a star of the second magnitude in Ursa Minor, popularly thought of as being at the north pole of the heavens, but in realty about 1¼ degrees from it: also called North Star (see charts and tables under constellation).

po-lar-i-scope (pō-lăr'ĭ-skōp), n. [<L.L. polaris, polar + Gk. skopein, to look], an instrument for observing the properties of polarized light and the behavior of substances illuminated by it.

po-lar-i-ty (pō-lăr'ĭ-tĭ), n. [see [1]pole], Phys., 1, the quality, possessed by magnets, electromagnets, etc., of having two opposite poles, or centers of attraction, each exerting a force opposite to that of the other, one called positive, the other negative; as, the polarity of the earth; 2, the property possessed by electrified or magnetized bodies, by which they exert directly opposite forces in opposite directions, the positive pole attracting and the negative pole repelling; Biol., 1, the arrangement of cell substances about an axis, which in the resting cell passes through centrosome and nucleus; 2, the possession by one part of a cell of greater physiological activity than the other parts.

po-lar-i-za-tion (pō"lär-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. the state of having two opposite poles: Elec., 1, the condition produced in a dielectric when in an electric field; 2, a phenomenon occurring at the electrodes of a voltaic cell, etc., resulting from accumulation thereon of gases set free by electrolysis; Optics, a condition of light and other forms of radiant energy in which they display different properties in different directions.

po-lar-ize (pō'lär-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], to provide with two opposite poles; give polarity to: polarized light, light so modified by a polarizer that it has different properties in different directions.

po-lar-iz-er (pō'lär-īz"ĕr), n. Optics, an apparatus, usually a form of crystal or mirror, used to convert ordinary light into polarized light.

[1]pole (pōl), n. [<Lat. polus <Gk. polos, pivot; axis; sky], 1, either of the two ends of the axis of a sphere; especially, either one of the extremities of the earth's axis; also, the territory lying about either of them; 2, either of two opposed forces or principles of any sort; 3, a region in a magnet, usually near one of the ends, where the greatest attractive force is manifested: Elec., one of the terminals of a voltaic cell or other electrical generator which supply the electrical energy; Biol., either of the extremities of the main axis of a cell; Astron., 1, one of the two points in which the axis of the earth, produced, pierces the celestial sphere, and about which the stars seem to revolve; 2, the star nearest the pole; the polestar: pole of a circle of a sphere, Solid Geom., either end of a diameter of a sphere which is perpendicular to the plane of a given circle on the surface of the sphere.

[2]pole (pōl), n. [<A.S. pāl <Lat. palus, stake], 1, a long staff or rod; as, a bean pole; a fishing pole; 2, a staff used in measuring; also, a rod, or unit of linear measure equal to 5½ yards: also called perch; in square measure, an area equal to 30¼ square yards: —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. poled (pōld), p.pr. poling], to push with a long rod or staff; as, to pole a skiff.

Syn. civil, courtly, courteous, polished, urbane, cultured, genteel, affable, refined, complaisant. To be civil requires one only to refrain from rudeness, to observe the least of those laws that govern social intercourse. Polite is sometimes used of a mechanical and uninterested observance of propriety, but ordinarily polite is a warmer word than civil, and describes a manner colored not only by the refinement and culture that good breeding affords, but by sympathy, tact, and natural kindliness. Courteous describes a particularly appealing politeness; courteous behavior issues from a deep well of consideration, and is distinguished by dignity, grace, and charming deference. Urbane adds to courteous the idea of smoothness, blandness, suavity; one is never ill at ease in the presence of urbanity. Affable adds to courteous the idea of approachableness, ease of address, sociability; sometimes there is a hint of the patronizing in studied affability. Complaisant describes one deferentially obliging to the wishes of others. Polished suggests the process of being finished, perfected, smoothed; and it also expresses the result of that process, emphasizing the finish acquired, rather than the spirit or nature of its possessor; we speak of a polished gentlewoman or a polished adventurer. Polished as applied to verse, works of art, or the like, connotes the finish that exquisite care and workmanship have imparted. Genteel in serious use is now either ironical or vulgar; it is applied to those who are shabbily stylish, or who make crude attempts at elegance and refinement.—Ant. boorish, rude, impolite.

pol-i-tic (pŏl'ĭ-tĭk), adj. [< Fr. politique < Gk. politikos, political, of the city < polītēs, citizen < polis, city], 1, prudent; shrewd; 2, crafty; cunning; 3, expedient, as a plan; 4, political: obsolete except in the phrase, the body politic.—adv. pol'i-tic-ly.

Syn. sagacious, artful, wily, discreet, judicious, diplomatic.—Ant. impolitic, unwary, indiscreet.

po-lit-i-cal (pō-lĭt'ĭ-kăl), adj. 1, pertaining to, or treating of, the science of government; as, political writers; 2, relating to, advocating, or having, a particular system of government; as, a political club; a political unit, such as a township; 3, pertaining to, or connected with, the management of public affairs; as, political reform; a political career; 4, pertaining to those who engage in politics as a business or profession; as, political intrigue: political economy, the science that treats of wealth, its nature, production, distribution, and consumption, and the laws which regulate and govern these: political science, the science that deals with the organization and management of government.—adv. po-lit'i-cal-ly.

pov-er-ty (pŏv'ĕr-tĭ), n. [<O.F. poverté <Lat. paupertas, poverty <pauper, poor], 1, the state of being poor; necessity; want; 2, any lack of richness in quality; scarcity; need.

Syn. destitution, need, penury, privation, mendicancy, indigence, pauperism, beggary, want. Poverty, a state the opposite of riches, is hence somewhat relative in the stringency it connotes; it can name the condition of being really poor, wanting the means to procure the necessaries of life—a bare, unlovely condition; or it can name an uncomfortable, but not a crying, lack. One whose income has been suddenly cut in two is plunged into comparative poverty, but he may have to go without cars and golf rather than food or clothing. Destitution is a want of the necessaries of life and a lack of the resources with which to buy them; it often connotes a sudden deprivation, as by fire, flood, or famine. Destitution may, therefore, be temporary, though extreme, poverty. Penury is abject poverty, and connotes a permanent state of utter want and wretchedness. Need may be a condition of continued poverty, though there is always a suggestion of urgency about need; or it may be the requirement of an occasion, easily satisfied; as, batteries in need of recharging; a child in need of correction. Indigence is a word that has been politely applied to the poverty of those fallen in station; but it can mean a lack of food and drink as well as a want of comforts or luxuries. Privation is the state of needing badly that which is not procurable and is much to be desired; castaways sometimes after a shipwreck suffer unavoidable privations. Mendicancy is such poverty that those suffering from it habitually beg for relief.—Ant. wealth, abundance, riches, affluence, opulence, substance, property, treasure.

Syn. entreat, implore, beg, beseech, plead. These words agree in being different modes of asking. To beg is to ask earnestly or humbly, or out of such need as compassion must heed; as, he begged for work; he begged for food. One who habitually asks for, and lives by, alms begs in a special sense. To entreat is to ask urgently, frequently by using what personal influence or other persuasive power one has; as, he entreated me, in the name of our friendship, to spare him. To beseech is even more urgent than entreat; it is earnest, fervent, passionate entreaty. To implore is to ask supplicatingly, desperately, often in humiliation; distracted mothers implore pardons at the last moment for sons convicted of murder. To plead, as here compared, is to make an earnest appeal to a person for another, or for something much desired. Except in the conventional "pray excuse me," a way in which beg, also, is used, pray is not often employed in modern usage, save in reference to communing with God. We may pray God to forgive us, beg him for mercy, implore his help.

prayer (prâr), n. [< O.F. preiere < L.L. precaria, obtained by prayer < Lat. precari, to pray], 1, the act of entreating earnestly; 2, thanks and praise given to God, and requests made of him; 3, a form of words suited to an appeal to God; 4, the request made; 5, a form of religious service for public worship; as, the order of morning prayer: Prayer of Manasses, a book of the Old Testament Apocrypha now considered to be the prayer referred to in 2 Chron. 33:18 (see Bible, NOTE).

prev-a-lent (prĕv'ə-lĕnt), adj. 1, powerful; victorious; 2, most general; common; widespread; as, a prevalent belief.—adv. prev'a-lent-ly.

pre-var-i-cate (prē-văr'ĭ-kāt), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], [< Lat. praevaricari (-atus), to straddle < prae, before + varicus, straddling < varus, bent], to stray from the truth; quibble; equivocate; evade.—n. pre-var'i-ca'tor.

Syn. equivocate, misrepresent, evade, deceive. These words agree in expressing the idea of getting away from the truth; they differ, however, in method and intent. To evade is cleverly to avoid answering a question, telling something we prefer not to tell, or the like. To evade, therefore, may or may not be deceptive; if by evading we produce a false or wrong impression, it is; if we are merely noncommittal, or successful in changing the subject to protect our own affairs from prying curiosity, it is not. To equivocate is deliberately to conceal the truth by resorting to ambiguity. One who has been evaded knows that he has been tricked into dropping the subject; one who has received an equivocal answer may think he has received information which the speaker knows to be untrue. To prevaricate is to speak or act in such a way as to deceive; prevarication is usually accomplished by shuffling, shifting, or quibbling, or by using vague or indefinite statements. Lie is an outright word; prevaricate is a softer word than lie, and throws part of the blame upon the trustful receiver of vague phrases, but the effect of prevaricating is practically that of lying. To misrepresent may or may not be blameworthy, according to the motive of the agent; to misrepresent is to give a false impression or account of, as through intent to deceive, lack of knowledge, or the like; as, he misrepresents the opportunities of the town; being poor, he misrepresented the life of the rich.

pre-var-i-ca-tion (prē-văr'ĭ-kā'shŭn), n. a quibbling to avoid the truth; a turning aside from truth or fair dealing; evasion.

Syn. shuffling, equivocation, misrepresentation, evasion, quibbling, double-dealing, deception, lie.

pre-ven-ient (prē-vēn'yĕnt), adj. [< Lat. praeveniens (-entis), coming before; hindering], 1, preceding; going before; antecedent; previous; hence, tending to prevent; 2, expectant; anticipatory: used with of.—n. pre-ven'ience.

pre-vent (prē-vĕnt'), v.t. [< Lat. prae, before + venire (ventus), to come], 1, to stop or keep from happening; 2, to hinder, obstruct, or impede: Obs., to anticipate.—adj. pre-vent'a-ble; pre-vent'i-ble.

Syn. hinder, obstruct, resist, oppose, avert, preclude, intercept, forestall, frustrate, stop, check. To hinder is to keep one from his purpose. We are hindered usually only for a time; the thought of delay and postponement is dominant. If we are hindered by a shower from starting on time, we may start later; whereas if we are prevented from going we do not go at all. To obstruct, oppose, and resist are modes of hindering; to obstruct is to place something in the way of accomplishment; it is often used of important actions that are blocked or checked. Hinder is used of any delay, however trifling. We are hindered, not obstructed, in our day's work by interruptions; the path of an army is obstructed, not hindered, by barricades or fallen logs, or by flooded roads. To oppose is to hinder by setting oneself against something, by summoning contending force against; we oppose lawbreakers in actuality when we fight them as individuals in the courts; we oppose the idea of lawbreaking in general by doing our own individual best to uphold the law. Resist is stronger than oppose, and suggests contending against that which is offering active force or energy against us. We resist efforts to infringe upon our liberty; hard woods resist wear better than soft.

pre-ven-tion (prē-vĕn'shŭn), n. 1, the act of hindering or keeping from happening; 2, hindrance or obstruction; also, that which hinders.

pre-ven-tive (prē-vĕn'tĭv), adj. tending to hinder: —n. that which hinders: Med., something which wards off disease.—adv. pre-ven'tive-ly.

pride (prīd), n. [<A.S. prȳto, prȳte, pride<prūt, proud], 1, undue self-esteem; conceit; 2, haughtiness; disdain; 3, sense of personal dignity; high and dignified self-respect; 4, that of which one is proud; as, his daughter was his pride; 5, the best or highest part of anything; as, he was in the pride of his manhood:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. prided, p.pr. priding], to indulge in self-esteem: used reflexively; as, to pride oneself on one's achievements.

Syn., n. vanity, conceit, complacency, vainglory. Pride is a term which may include conceit and vanity, but it has also a meaning apart from these. Pride may be a feeling noble, dignified, and admirable; such pride is that which forbids us to show our hurt, however much we are humiliated; which bids us keep doggedly on, when we are about to fall, or otherwise works through our natural self-respect to compel us to be our best. Such pride is the envy of the weak, for it is the possession only of the strong. Unworthy pride is haughty, overbearing, arrogant, hate-producing. Pride in this bad sense is also connected with the idea of strength, for this characteristic makes people overweening, irritable, and apt to be violent in their claims for themselves. Vanity and conceit are cardinal weaknesses. Vanity is felt over trifling things; and the vanity felt over one's fashionable clothes is a much more empty and frivolous feeling than that connoted by the unfavorable sense of pride. Vanity must not only consider itself fine, but must have the open adulation of others; vanity wilts under disapproval, where sometimes pride would wax so much the fiercer. Conceit is sometimes based on actual achievement or possession, but oftener it is the fruit of excessive self-love, and is boastfully puffed up and lofty over what does not even exist. Frivolous people are vain; usually youth is conceited. Vainglory is vanity pompous, strutting, and boastful. Complacency is a calm and composed self-approval, often irritating to others.—Ant., n. humility, self-distrust, self-depreciation, meekness, lowliness, humbleness, self-abasement.

NOTE.—In English prosody, the verse, or line, is said to be in monometer, dimeter, trimeter, tetrameter, pentameter, hexameter, heptameter, or octameter, etc., according as there are one, two, three, etc., feet in the line. The foot may be of any of the following types: iambic, ⏑ –; trochaic, – ⏑; anapestic, ⏑ ⏑ –; dactylic, – ⏑ ⏑; spondaic, – –; or of other types less common, as of the amphibrach, ⏑ – ⏑; amphimacer, – ⏑ –; pyrrhic, ⏑ ⏑; etc. Verses may contain feet of different kinds in the same rhythm; if one kind predominates, it gives its name to the verse; as, a verse predominantly iambic may contain an anapestic foot.

Iambic pentameter: ⏑ – | ⏑ – | ⏑ – | ⏑ – | ⏑ –
The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.

Trochaic tetrameter: – ⏑ | – ⏑ | – ⏑ | – ⏑
Many things Nokomis taught him.

Anapestic trimeter: ⏑ ⏑ – | ⏑ ⏑ – | ⏑ ⏑ –
I am monarch of all I survey.

Dactylic hexameter: usually with a spondee or trochee at the end, and in this case having a spondee in the fourth foot: – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑ ⏑ | – – | – ⏑ ⏑ | – ⏑
Now had the season returned when the nights grow colder and longer.

Iambic pentameter, with one spondaic foot:
In that fierce light which beats upon a throne.

Iambic pentameter, with one pyrrhic foot:
Not wicked, but seduced by impious arts.

pyg-my (pĭg′mĭ), n. [pl. -mies (-mĭz)], [< Lat. pygmaeus < Gk. pugmaios, a dwarf < pugmē, length from elbow to knuckles], 1, a dwarf; 2, a very insignificant person: Pygmy, 1, one of a race of dwarfs mentioned by classical authors; 2, one of a dwarf race of negroes in Central Africa:—adj. very small; dwarfish; small of its kind. Also, pig′my.—adj. pyg-me′an.

py-ja-ma (pī-jä′mȧ; pī-jā′mȧ), n. [< Pers. pāy, leg +jāmah, clothing], an Oriental garment, consisting of a loose pair of silk or cotton trousers: pl. (usually, in the United States, pajamas), a sleeping suit consisting of a jacket and a loose pair of trousers. Also, pa-ja′ma.

Pyl-a-des (pĭl′ȧ-dēz), n. [< Gk.], Gk. Myth., cousin and friend of the Greek hero Orestes.

py-lon (pī′lŏn), n. [< Gk. pulōn, gateway < pulē, gate], Archæol., in Egyptian temples, a gateway in the form of a truncated pyramid or two such pyramids; Aëro., a post or tower used as a marker to indicate the course over which an airplane is to fly.

py-lor-ic (pī-lōr′ĭk; pī-), adj. [see pylorus], pertaining to the pylorus, or the opening of the stomach leading to the small intestine.

py-lo-rus (pī-lō′rŭs; pī-), n. [pl. -ri (-rī)], [< Gk. pulē, gate+ouros, warder], the opening of the stomach into the small intestine; also called pyloric valve (see pancreas, illus.).

py-o-gen-e-sis (pī″ō-jĕn′ē-sĭs), n. [< Gk. puon, pus+genesis, a beginning], Pathol., the formation of pus; also, the theory of the cause and method of pus formation.—adj. py″o-ge-net′ic.—adj. py″o-gen′ic.

py-or-rhe-a (pī″ō-rē′ȧ), n. [< Gk. puon, pus +rhein, to flow], Pathol., a discharge of pus: pyorrhea alveolaris, Pathol., an inflammatory infection of the gums, accompanied by loosening of the teeth. Also, py″or-rhœ′a.

py-o-sis (pī-ō′sĭs), n. [< Gk. puōsis, suppuration], Med., the forming of pus; 2, pus.

pyr-a-mid (pĭr′ȧ-mĭd), n. [< Gk. puramis (-idos), pyramid: prob. of Egypt. origin and not related to Gk. pur, fire], 1, Geom., a solid body with a triangular, square, or polygonal base, having its triangular sides ending in a point at the apex or top (see solid, illus.); 2, any structure of similar shape, as certain pinnacles in Gothic architecture: Mineral., a crystal form whose faces intersect all of the crystal axes: pl. 1, a group of Egyptian monuments having square bases and triangular sides sloping to an apex, built by the early kings to serve as their tombs; 2, Billiards, a kind of pool.

PYRAMIDS OF GIZA, EGYPT

py-ram-i-dal (pĭ-răm′ĭ-dăl), adj. shaped like a pyramid.—adj. pyr″a-mid′ic (pĭr″ȧ-mĭd′ĭk).—adj. pyr″a-mid′i-cal (-ĭ-kăl).

Pyr-a-mus (pĭr′ȧ-mŭs), n. [Gk.], Class. Myth., a Babylonian youth, lover of Thisbe, who, thinking his loved one dead, killed himself: the subject of a poem by Ovid, and burlesqued by Shakespeare in "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

pyre (pīr), n. [< Gk. pur (puros), fire], a funeral pile; a pile of wood or other combustible material, usually for burning a dead body.

Pyr-e-ne-an (pĭr″ē-nē′ăn), adj. [< Gk. Purēnē, a beloved of Hercules, said to be buried in the mountains], of or pertaining to the Pyrenees, the mountains lying between France and Spain.

py-ret-ic (pī-rĕt′ĭk), adj. [< Gk. puretos, fever], Med., of or pertaining to fever; feverish.

py-rex (pī′rĕks), n. [trade name: prob. < Gk. pur, fire], a variety of glassware, used in cooking, possessing unusual strength and resistance to heat.

pyr-he-li-om-e-ter (pĭr-hē″lĭ-ŏm′ē-tẽr; pĭr-), n. [< Gk. pur, fire+hēlios, sun +metron, a measure], Astron., an apparatus for measuring the intensity of solar radiation.

pyr-i-dine (pir'ĭ-dĭn; -dēn), n. [< Gk. pur, fire], a nearly colorless, liquid basic compound, of sharp, peculiar odor, occurring in tar, bone oil, tobacco smoke, etc.: used chiefly as a rubber solvent, in denaturing alcohol, and in medicine.

py-rite (pī'rīt; pĭr'ĭt), n. [see pyrites], native iron disulphide, a common mineral, often of a pale golden-yellow color, occurring in cubes and other crystals, used as a source of sulphur and in the manufacture of sulphuric acid: commonly called iron pyrites: also called fool's gold, because sometimes mistaken for gold by the unwary.—adj. py-rit'ic; py-rit'i-cal (pĭ-rĭt'-).

py-ri-tes (pī-rī'tēz), n. [< Gk. purites, of fire < pur, fire], 1, any of several minerals, chiefly sulphides of iron, copper, or tin; especially, 2, the cubic form of iron disulphide: Obs., any mineral, as flint, used for striking fire: iron pyrites, pyrite.

py-ro-chem-i-cal (pī'rō-kĕm'ĭ-kăl; pĭr'ō-), adj. [pyro- (< Gk. pur, fire) + chemical], pertaining to chemistry at high temperatures.

py-ro-e-lec-tric-i-ty (pī'rō-ē-lĕk-trĭs'ĭ-tĭ; pĭr'ō-), n. [pyro- (< Gk. pur, fire) + electric], electric polarity developed in some kinds of crystals by subjecting them to a change of temperature.—adj. and n. py'ro-e-lec'tric.

py-ro-gal-lic (pī'rō-găl'ĭk; pĭr'ō-), adj. [pyro- (< Gk. pur, fire) + gallic], Chem., obtained from gallic acid by action of heat; pertaining to pyrogallol: pyrogallic acid, pyrogallol (which see).

py-ro-gal-lol (pī'rō-găl'ōl; -ōl; pĭr'ō-), n. Chem., a poisonous phenol, weakly acid, occurring in colorless crystalline needles, soluble in water: extensively used as a developing agent in photography: also called pyrogallic acid, or, commonly, pyro.

py-rog-ra-phy (pī-rŏg'rə-fĭ), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + graphein, to write], the art or process of decorating wood or leather by burning, as with a flame or heated iron.—n. py-rog'ra-pher. —adj. py'ro-graph'ic (pī'rō-grăf'ĭk; pĭr'ō-).

py-ro-lig-ne-ous (pī'rō-lĭg'nē-ŭs; pĭr'ō-), adj. [< Gk. pur, fire + Lat. lignum, wood], produced, or obtained, by the distillation of wood; as, pyroligneous alcohol, or wood alcohol: pyroligneous acid, crude acetic acid containing tar, creosote, etc., obtained by the dry distillation of wood.

py-ro-lu-site (pī'rō-lū'sīt), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + lousis, a washing], Mineral., a soft, gray, crystalline or massive mineral, native manganese dioxide, an important ore of manganese: added to molten glass to remove brown and green tints.

py-rol-y-sis (pī-rŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + luein, to loose], Chem., the chemical decomposition of substances by the action of heat.—adj. py'ro-lyt'ic (pī'rō-lĭt'ĭk; pĭr'ō-).

py-ro-man-cy (pī'rō-măn'sĭ; pĭr'ō-), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + manteia, divining], foretelling the future by fire.—adj. and n. py'ro-man'tic.

py-ro-ma-ni-a (pī'rō-mā'nĭ-ə; pĭr'ō-), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + mania, madness], an insane desire to set fire to something.—n. py'ro-ma'ni-ac. —adj. py'ro-ma-ni'a-cal (-mā-nī'ə-kăl).

py-rom-e-te. (pī-rŏm'ē-tēr), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + metron, a measure], 1, an instrument for measuring unusually high temperatures, as of furnaces, molten metals, etc.; 2, an instrument for measuring the expansion of solids by heat.

py-ro-met-ric (pī'rō-mĕt'rĭk; pĭr'ō-), adj. of or pertaining to a pyrometer; made with a pyrometer, as a measurement of high temperature.

py-rom-e-try (pī-rŏm'ē-trĭ), n. the science of the measurement of high temperatures.

py-ro-phor-ic (pī'rō-fŏr'ĭk; pĭr'ō-), adj. [< Gk. pur, fire + -phoros, bearing < pherein, to bear], capable of taking fire spontaneously or by very slight elevation of temperature, as phosphorus: pyrophoric alloy, an alloy of iron and cerium which, when struck, gives off sparks capable of lighting inflammable gases: used for gas lighters.

py-ro-sul-phu-ric ac-id (pī'rō-sŭl-fū'rĭk; pĭr'ō-), a powerful acid, crystalline when pure, but prepared for commerce as an oily, fuming liquid: also called disulphuric acid.

py-ro-tech-nic (pī'rō-tĕk'nĭk; pĭr'ō-), adj. [pyro- (< Gk. pur, fire) + technic], 1, pertaining to fireworks or the art of making them; hence, 2, Colloq., brilliant; sensational.

py-ro-tech-nics (pī'rō-tĕk'nĭks; pĭr'ō-), n.pl. fireworks or the art of making them: Colloq., sensational display; also, loud or prolonged speech. Also, py'ro-tech'ny.

py-ro-tech-nist (pī'rō-tĕk'nĭst; pĭr'ō-), n. 1, one skilled in the manufacture of fireworks; 2, one who supervises displays of fireworks.

py-rox-ene (pī'rŏk-sēn; pĭr'ŏk-), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + xenos, stranger: because thought alien to igneous rocks], any of a common and important group of iron, magnesium, and calcium silicates, found in many igneous rocks and in volcanic lava.

py-rox-y-lin (pī-rŏk'sĭ-lĭn), n. [< Gk. pur, fire + xulon, wood], 1, guncotton; nitrocellulose, a substance obtained by the action of nitric acid upon cellulose: a powerful explosive used in the manufacture of other explosives, celluloid, etc.; 2, a solution of guncotton in ether or other solvent, used as a dressing for cuts and for the production of artificial leather: also called collodion. Also, py-rox'y-line.

Pyr-rha (pĭr'ə), n. [< Gk.], Gk. Myth., the wife of Deucalion, who with him survived the Deluge and repopulated the earth.

pyr-rhic (pĭr'ĭk), n. [prob. < Gk. Purrhikhos, name of inventor of meter], an ancient Grecian war dance: Pros., a metrical foot consisting of two unstressed syllables (see prosody, NOTE):—adj. Pros., consisting of two unstressed syllables, as a metrical foot; containing such metrical feet, as verse.

Pyr-rhic (pĭr'ĭk), adj. [< Gk. Purrhos, Pyrrhus], pertaining to Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, who invaded Italy, 279 B. C.: Pyrrhic victory, a victory won with great loss of life: so called from the victory of Pyrrhus over the Romans at Asculum in 279 B. C.

Pyr-rho-nism (pĭr'ō-nĭzm), n. [< Gk. Purrhōn, Pyrrho], the doctrine of extreme skepticism taught by Pyrrho, a Greek philosopher (365–275 B. C.); hence, complete skepticism.

pyr-rho-tite (pĭr'ō-tīt), n. [< Gk. purrotēs, redness < pur, fire], Mineral., a bronze-colored, lustrous mineral, a compound of iron sulphides, often containing sufficient nickel to be valuable as an ore. Also, pyr'rho-tine (-tĭn).

Pyr-rhus (pĭr'ŭs), n. [see Pyrrhic], Gk. Myth., a Greek hero of the Trojan War, son of Achilles: also called Neoptolemus.

Py-thag-o-re-an (pī-thăg'ō-rē'ăn; pĭth'ə-gō-), adj. [< Lat. < Gk. Puthagoreios < Puthagoras, Pythagoras], pertaining to Pythagoras, a Greek philosopher who lived in the sixth century B. C., or to his system of philosophy, which included the doctrine of the transmigration of souls:—n. a disciple of Pythagoras.—n. py-thag'o-re'an-ism.

Pyth-i-an (pĭth'ĭ-ăn), adj. [< Gk. Puthios < Puthō or Puthōn, an older name of Delphi, or < Puthōn, python, the great snake said to have been slain there by Apollo], Gk. Antiq., designating, or pertaining to, the temple of Apollo at Delphi, or the athletic games held at Delphi every four years:—n. 1, a native or inhabitant of Delphi; especially, one of the priestesses of Apollo; 2, sometimes, Apollo himself.

Pyth-i-as (pĭth'ĭ-ăs), n. [< Gk.], Gk. Myth., a citizen of Syracuse during the reign of the tyrant Dionysius I (430–367 B. C.), famed for his faithful friendship with Damon: the story being that Pythias was condemned to death by Dionysius, was granted a last visit to his home when his friend Damon offered himself as hostage for his return, and, on the appointed day, returned to be executed, whereupon Dionysius pardoned him. Also, more properly, Phin'ti-as.

py-thon (pī'thŏn), n. [< Gk. Puthōn, a mythical serpent said to have been slain by Apollo], 1, any of a genus (Python) of large, non-venomous serpents resembling the boa; 2, a sooth-saying or familiar spirit; also, a person possessed by such a spirit: Python, Gk. Myth., a huge serpent which issued from the mud left by the deluge: slain by Apollo.

pyth-o-ness (pĭth'ō-nĕs), n. [< Gk. puthōnissa, fem. of Gk. puthōn, a ruling spirit; a diviner: see Pythian], a witch; any woman supposed to have the power of foretelling events; especially, one of the priestesses of Apollo's temple at Delphi.

pyx (pĭks), n. [< Gk. puxis, a box < puxos, box tree], 1, R. C. Ch., the box or container in which the consecrated wafer is kept; 2, the box in which coins are placed to be tested at the annual test of coins conducted at the British mint.

pyx-id-i-um (pĭk-sĭd'ĭ-ŭm), n. [pl. -ia (-ə)], [< Gk. puxidion, dim. of puxis, a box], Bot., a seed vessel which in opening forms an upper and a lower half, as in the purslanes.

1, pyxidium of purslane; 2, a pyxidium like fruit (Jeffersonia diphylla).

Q, q (kū), n. [pl. Q's; Qs; q's; qs (kūz)], 1, the seventeenth letter of the English alphabet, or its sound (for certain uses see alphabet, Note); 2, as a medieval Roman numeral, 500.

Q. abbr. 1, Queen; 2, question; 3, query (also, Qy.); 4, quasi; 5, [Lat. quadrans], farthing; 6, quire.

qaf (kăf), n. [Arab.], the 21st letter of the Arabic alphabet (see App. I), nearly equivalent to the English q, pronounced gutturally: as a numeral, 100.

Q. B. abbr., queen's bench:—Q. E. D., [Lat. quod erat demonstrandum], which was to be demonstrated:—Q. E. F., [Lat. quod erat faciendum], which was to be done:—Q. M., Quartermaster:—Q. M. C., Quartermaster Corps:—Q. M. G., Quartermaster-general:—qr., [pl. qr.; qrs.], 1, [Lat. quadrans], farthing; 2, quarter: the fourth part of a hundredweight; 3, quire:—qt., [pl. qt.; qts.], quart:—q. t., Slang, quiet.

qua (kwā; kwä), conj. [Lat. < qui, who], as; in the manner or capacity of; as, he complained qua club member, not qua citizen.

[1]quack (kwăk), n. [imit.], the cry of a duck, or a harsh sound like it:—v.i. of a duck, to utter a quack; also, to make a sound like a duck's quack.

[2]quack (kwăk), n. [abbr. of quacksalver, q.v.], 1, an ignorant person who claims medical skill and knowledge of marvelous remedies; hence, 2, a fraudulent pretender to skill of any kind; a charlatan:—v.i. 1, to pretend to medical skill; 2, to make false claims of any kind; talk noisily and boastfully:—adj. making false claims; fraudulent; as, a quack doctor.—n. quack'er-y (kwăk'ẽr-ĭ).

quack-sal-ver (kwăk'săl-vẽr), n. [Du. < quacken, to quack; boast + salf, salve], Rare, one who boasts of his pretended skill in medicines and salves; a charlatan; quack.

[1]quad (kwŏd), n. [abbr. of quadrat: see quadrate], Print., a blank type, one half, one, two, or three ems in width, usually not printing, but used for spacing; a quadrat; as, ■, an em quad; ▮, an en quad.

[2]quad (kwŏd), n. [abbr. of quadrangle, q.v.], Colloq., the quadrangle or court of a college, prison, or like group of buildings.

quad. abbr. 1, quadrant; 2, quadrat; quadrate; 3, quadratic; 4, quadruplex.

Quad-ra-ges-i-ma (kwŏd"rȧ-jĕs'ĭ-mȧ), n. [L.L. = the forty days of Lent < Lat. quadragesimus, fortieth], Eccl., the first Sunday in Lent, approximately the fortieth day before Easter: also called Quadragesima Sunday: Obs., Lent.

quad-ra-ges-i-mal (kwŏd"rȧ-jĕs'ĭ-mȧl), adj. consisting of 40: Quadragesimal, pertaining to the forty days of Lent; Lenten.

quad-ran-gle (kwŏd'răng"gl), n. [< L.L. quadrangulum, four-cornered < Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + angulus, an angle], 1, a four-sided court or lawn, usually surrounded by buildings, as on a college campus; 2, in the United States Geological Survey maps, a rectangular division of land charted on one sheet: Geom., a plane figure having four sides and four angles; a quadrilateral.—adj. quad-ran'gu-lar.

quad-rant (kwŏd'rȧnt), n. [< Lat. quadrans (-antis), a fourth part], Geom., 1, one fourth of a circumference, or an arc of 90 degrees; 2, the area bounded by such an arc and the radii at its extremities; Astron. and Nav., an instrument, formerly made in many forms, for measuring the altitude of heavenly bodies, consisting of a graduated arc of 90 degrees or, usually, 45 degrees graduated to measure 90 degrees, with a movable radius carrying sights or a telescope: now replaced by the sextant; Mil., an instrument for elevating, or adjusting the elevation of, a gun.

QUADRANT

quad-rat (kwŏd'rȧt), n. [var. of quadrate], Print., a blank type used for spacing a line: also called quad (see [1]quad).

quad-rate (kwŏd'rāt), adj. [< Lat. quadrare (-atus), to make square < quattuor, four], having four equal, or nearly equal, sides; square:—n. a square: Zoöl., 1, a bone connecting the lower jaw with the cranium in some vertebrates; 2, any of certain square muscles:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -rated, p.pr. -rating], to agree; correspond: with with:—v.t. 1, to make square; 2, to divide into quarters; 3, to cause to agree or correspond: Mil., to adjust (a gun) on its carriage.

quad-rat-ic (kwŏd-răt'ĭk), adj. literally, square: Alg., involving the second, but no higher, power of an unknown quantity; as, a quadratic equation:—n. Alg., a quadratic equation, as $ax^2 + bx + c = 0$: quadratics, n. pl. used as sing. the division of algebra that treats of such equations.

quad-ra-ture (kwŏd'rȧ-tūr), n. Math., the process of determining the area of a geometrical figure: so called because the result was formerly expressed as a square equal in area to the geometrical figure; Astron., the relative position of two heavenly bodies differing 90 degrees in right ascension; as, the sun and moon are in quadrature when halfway between the times of new and full moon (see syzygy, illus.): quadrature of the circle, Math., the famous insoluble problem of constructing a square exactly equal in area to a given circle.

quad-ren-ni-al (kwŏd-rĕn'ĭ-ăl), adj. [< Lat. quadriennium < quadri- (< quattuor, four) + annus, year], 1, occurring once in four years; 2, comprising four years; as, the President is elected for a quadrennial term:—n. a fourth anniversary.

quad-ric (kwŏd'rĭk), adj. [< Lat. quattuor, four], Math., designating, or pertaining to, the second degree: used in the case of two or more variables.

quad-ri-ceps (kwŏd'rĭ-sĕps), n. [< Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + -ceps (< caput, head)], Anat., the large extensor muscle on the front of the thigh: also called quadriceps extensor.

quad-ri-ga (kwŏd-rī'gȧ), n. [pl. -gæ (-jē)], [Lat.], Rom. Antiq., a chariot or car drawn by four horses abreast (for illus. see chariot).

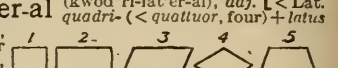
quad-ri-lat-er-al (kwŏd"rĭ-lăt'ẽr-ăl), adj. [< Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + latus (lateris), side], having four sides:—n. Geom., a plane figure bounded by four straight lines.



QUADRILATERALS
1–4, parallelograms; 1, 2, rectangles; 1, square; 2, long rectangle; 3, rhomboid, or long parallelogram; 4, rhombus, lozenge, or diamond; 5, trapezoid.

qua-drille (kwȧ-drĭl'), n. [Fr. < Sp. cuadrilla, dim. of cuadra < Lat. quadra, a square], 1, an old-fashioned square dance for four or more couples, or music arranged for it; 3, a certain game of cards, in which four persons play with a deck of 40 cards.

quad-ril-lion (kwŏd-rĭl'yŭn), n. [Fr. < Lat. quadri-, consisting of four: in imit. of million], in United States and French usage, the number denoted by unity with fifteen ciphers annexed; in Great Britain, unity with 24 ciphers annexed.

quad-ri-no-mi-al (kwŏd"rĭ-nō'mĭ-ăl), n. [< Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + nomen, name], Alg., an expression consisting of four terms:—adj. Alg., consisting of four terms.

quad-ri-par-tite (kwŏd"rĭ-pär'tīt; kwŏd-rĭp'ẽr-tīt), adj. [< Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + partire (-itus), to divide], divided into, or consisting of, four parts; as, quadripartite vaulting.

quad-ri-syl-la-ble (kwŏd'rĭ-sĭl'ȧ-bl), n. [quadri- (< Lat. quattuor, four) + syllable], a word with four syllables.

quad-ri-va-lent (kwŏd"rĭ-vā'lĕnt; kwŏd-rĭv'ȧ-lĕnt), adj. [< Lat. quadri- (< quattuor, four) + valens (-entis), being strong], Chem., having a valence of four.—n. quad"ri-va'lence.

quad-riv-i-um (kwŏd-rĭv'ĭ-ŭm), n. [pl. -rivia (-ȧ)], [L.L. = the four branches of mathematics: literally, a place where four roads meet < quadri- (< quattuor, four) + via, way, road], in medieval education, the advanced course, consisting of arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music, which with the elementary course, or trivium, in grammar, logic, and rhetoric, made up the so-called seven liberal arts.

quad-roon (kwŏd-rōōn'), n. [< Sp. cuarterón < cuarto < Lat. quartus, fourth < quattuor, four], a person whose blood is one fourth negro; the child of a mulatto and a white person.

Quad-ru-ma-na (kwŏd-rōō'mȧ-nȧ) n.pl. [< Lat. quadru- (< quattuor, four) + manus, hand], Zoöl., a former classification of mammals having all four feet formed like hands, as apes, monkeys, marmosets, and lemurs.—n. quad'ru-man (-rōō-măn); quad'ru-mane (-mān).—adj. quad-ru'ma-nous.

quad-ru-ped (kwŏd'rōō-pĕd), n. [< Lat. quadru- (< quattuor, four) + pes (pedis), foot], a four-footed animal; especially, a four-footed mammal:—adj. having four feet: four-footed.

quad-ru-ple (kwŏd′rōō-pl), adj. [Fr.< Lat. quadruplus, fourfold < quadri-, consisting of four + -plus (< root of -plēre, to fill)], fourfold; four times as many or as much: Mus., designating a measure with four beats, the first and third beats being accented; four-part:—n. a quantity four times as great as another: —v.t. and v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -pled (-pld), p.pr. -pling], to make or become four times as much or as many; multiply by four.

quad-ru-plet (kwŏd′rōō-plĕt), n. 1, a combination of four of one kind; 2, one of four children born at the same birth.

quad-ru-plex (kwŏd′rōō-plĕks), adj. [Lat. = four-fold < quadri-, consisting of four + -plex (< plic-, root of plicare, to fold)], fourfold: used especially of a system of telegraphy in which four messages, two in each direction, can be sent at the same time over one wire:—n. in telegraphy, an instrument used in a quadruplex system; also, the system itself.

quad-ru-pli-cate (kwŏd-rōō′pli-kāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], [< Lat. quadri-, consisting of four + plicare (-atus), to fold], to multiply by four:—adj. (-kăt), fourfold: Math., raised to the fourth power:—n. (-kăt), one of four like things: in quadruplicate, in four identical copies.

quæ-re (kwē′rē), v. imperative [Lat. = seek thou], literally, inquire: used to introduce a question or a subject of doubt:—n. a question; query.

quæs-tor (kwĕs′tôr; kwĕs′tōr), n. [Lat. < quaerere (quaesitus), to seek], in ancient Rome, originally, a judge in criminal cases; later, one of a class of state treasurers. Also, ques′tor.

quaff (kwăf), v.t. [source uncertain], Poet., to drink in large quantities:—v.i. to drink deeply.

quak-er-la-dy (kwāk′ĕr-lā″dĭ), n. a delicate, low-growing plant (Houstonia cærulea) with small, four-petaled, bluish flowers: also called innocence or bluet.

quak-ing asp-en a widely distributed species of North American poplar (Populus tremuloides), with small leaves that tremble with the slightest breeze, because of their flattened stems.

qual-i-fi-ca-tion (kwŏl′ĭ-fĭ-kā′shŭn), n. [see qualify], 1, the act of making, or the state of being, fit or qualified; 2, that which makes a person or thing fitted or adapted to a special use or circumstance; fitness; 3, a restriction; modification.

qual-i-fied (kwŏl′ĭ-fīd), p.adj. 1, fitted; adapted; 2, limited or restricted, as praise.

qual-i-fi-er (kwŏl′ĭ-fī″ĕr), n. that which limits or modifies: Gram., a word, as an adjective or adverb, attached to and modifying or limiting the meaning of another word.

qual-i-fy (kwŏl′ĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Fr. qualifier < L.L. qualificare, to endue with a quality < Lat. qualis, such as + facere, to make], 1, to make fit for any occupation, office, or purpose; empower legally; 2, to moderate, soften, or lessen, as a reprimand; 3, to alter by narrowing or restricting, as a statement; limit; modify; 4, to reduce in strength, as a liquor: Gram., to express some quality of; limit; modify; as, an adjective qualifies a noun or pronoun:—v.i. to be or become competent or fit for any office or employment; be empowered legally.

Syn. prepare, change, abate, diminish, temper, modify, mitigate, soften. To change is to make, or become, different; as, to change color; change one's mind; to change to a new course of action; to change one's tactics. To modify is to make partial, usually minor, changes in; we modify an estimate discovered to be higher or lower than it should be. To qualify is to subject to reserves or limitations, usually with a softening or mitigating effect; we qualify the severity of a reproof by accompanying it with some sign of gentleness. Modify is used, also, in the latter sense of mitigate, soften.

qual-i-ta-tive (kwŏl′ĭ-tā-tĭv), adj. [see quality], pertaining to quality or kind, as opposed to quantity or amount: opposite of quantitative: qualitative analysis, Chem., chemical analysis which determines what elements compose a compound, but not the proportion of each.—adv. qual′i-ta-tive-ly.

qual-i-ty (kwŏl′ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tiz)], [< Lat. qualitas (-atis), sort, kind < qualis, such as], 1, that which distinguishes one person or thing from others, as color, weight, skill, intelligence, etc.; 2, essential nature; kind; 3, degree of excellence; as, the finish was of inferior quality; 4, trait; characteristic; property; as, sincerity was his dominating quality; 5, loftiness of character or rank; as, quality shows in conduct: Mus., that which gives a sound its special individuality or tone color, depending upon the nature of the overtones; timbre: the quality, Archaic or Dial., persons of high rank.

Syn. attribute, property, trait, characteristic. Quality names an essential, inherent part of the nature of a thing or being; as, the qualities of a judge; the qualities of physical matter. If a quality is changed, the whole is changed in that one respect; as, isolation from his kind altered the quality of his thinking. An attribute is a quality assigned by us to a being or object. If our thinking has been right, and the quality so ascribed is in fact inherent, the attribute is truly an essential quality; if our judgment is at fault, the attribute is not truly a quality. (See characteristic.)

qualm (kwäm), n. [source uncertain], 1, a feeling of sickness, especially in the stomach; 2, hence, a sudden doubt or misgiving; 3, a twinge of conscience; compunction.—adj. qualm′ish.—adv. qualm′-ish-ly.—n. qualm′ish-ness.

QUARRELS
1, def. 1; 2, def. 3.

2quar-rel (kwŏr'ĕl), n. [< Lat. querela, querella, complaint < queri, to complain], 1, an angry dispute; petty fight; 2, a cause for dispute; 3, a disagreement or falling out; serious breach of friendship:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -reled or -relled (-ĕld), p.pr. -reling or -relling], 1, to dispute violently; fight; usually with with; 2, to disagree; fall out; 3, to find fault; with with.—n. quar'rel-er; quar'rel-ler.

Syn., n. dispute, controversy, feud, wrangle, fuss, altercation, contention. Dispute, in its good sense, is a calling in question of something claimed or asserted by another; hence, it may name a difference of opinion as to the validity of a will, or it may be a friendly debate. In its bad sense, dispute, commonly oral, is a hot wrangle, usually undignified and sharp; as, a dispute over precedence. The idea underlying controversy is that of opposition to the opinion of another; a controversy may be a neutral discussion on an abstract subject; as, a controversy over the superiority of democratic government to paternalistic government; in its ordinary sense, a controversy, usually in words and often in writing, is bitter and angry in its ill feeling. The idea underlying contention is that of maintaining a stand against another; hence, contention is personal, and ill feeling is unavoidable; it is commonly in words, though sometimes in acts, and is bitterly conflicting; as, they spent their days in contention and strife. Altercation names a hot dispute or a stormy, wordy contention. Quarrel names an angry dispute, in word or act, usually accompanied by a rupture of friendly relations, though quarrel applies also to trifling differences, like those arising among children. Quarrel may also name the cause of complaint or ground for differences; as, I have no quarrel with you.

quoit (kwoit; koit), n. [source uncertain], 1, originally, a discus; 2, a flat iron ring, about six inches in diameter: pl. a game in which players pitch these rings at a short peg or other mark.

quon-dam (kwŏn'dăm), adj. [Lat. = formerly], having been at some time; former.

quo-rum (kwō'rŭm), n. [Lat. = of whom], 1, originally, in England, certain justices of the peace whose presence was necessary to constitute a bench; later, all the justices of the peace together; 2, now, the proportion of members of any body or corporation that must be present if a meeting is to transact business legally: usually a majority.

quo-ta (kwō'tă), n. [pl. -tas (-tăz)], [< Lat. quota (pars), how great (a part) < quot, how many], the proportional share which one is entitled to receive from, or bound to contribute to, a total sum.

quo-ta-tion (kwō-tā'shŭn), n. [see quote], 1, the act of repeating the words of another;

2, the words repeated; 3, a passage from a book or a part of a poem, or the like, referred to as an illustration: Com., the current market price of a stock or commodity; also, a statement of the current price; as, today's quotation on wheat is up five points.

quo-ta-tion mark a mark of punctuation used to indicate a quotation: usually two inverted commas ["] at the beginning and two apostrophes ["] at the end, or, especially in British usage, a single inverted comma, and a single apostrophe; also, a single inverted comma or apostrophe (in British usage, double) used to show a quotation within a quotation; as, the witness replied, "He repeated, 'I will.'"

quote (kwōt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. quoted, p.pr. quoting], [<L.L. quotare, to divide into chapters or parts: see quota], 1, to repeat or copy (a passage from a book, document, saying, or the like); 2, to name or refer to as an authority or illustration; 3, in printing, to inclose in quotation marks; as, the Bible does not quote dialog: Com., to give the current market price of: as, to quote a railroad stock: Obs., 1, to make a note of; 2, to observe; notice:—v.i. to repeat the words of another:—n. Print., a quotation mark (see App. I): Colloq., a quotation.—adj. quot'a-ble.

quoth (kwōth), v.t. [past tense of obs. quethe <A.S. cwethan, to speak], Archaic, said: spoke: followed by a subject of the first or third person.

quoth-a (kwōth'ä), interj. [corr. of quoth he], Archaic, indeed! well! forsooth! also used, in contempt, for quoth he, said he.

quo-tid-i-an (kwō-tid'I-ăn), adj. [<Lat. quotidie, daily <quot, how many + dies, day], daily; occurring every day:—n. Med., a form of fever having a daily recurrence.

quo-tient (kwō'shĕnt), n. [<Lat. adv. quotiens, how often], Math., the result of the process of division; in arithmetic, the number showing how many times a given number is contained in another.

quo war-ran-to (kwō wŏ-răn'tō), [pl. quo warrantos (-tōz)], [Lat. = by what authority], Law, a writ or order commanding a person to show by what right, authority, or warrant he exercises an office or certain powers; also, an action brought by a government or some one, called the relator, in the name of a goverment, to recover an office or franchise from the person holding it.

q. v. abbr. 1, [Lat. quod vide], which see; 2, [Lat. quantum vis], as much as you wish:—qy., query.

R, r (är), n. [pl. R's; Rs; r's; rs (ärz)], the eighteenth letter of the English alphabet, or its sound (for certain uses, see alphabet, NOTE): Elec., the symbol for resistance: R, as a medieval Roman numeral, 80: Chem., in formulas, radical; especially, hydrocarbon radical; Math., 1, radius; 2, radius vector; 3, rank; 4, ratio: the three R's, reading, writing, and arithmetic: as if reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic; hence, the primary essentials of education.

R. abbr. 1, Republican; 2, Rabbi; 3, Radical; 4, Réaumur; 5, Response; 6, River; 7, [Lat. rex or regina], king or queen:—R, [Lat. recipe], take: used on medical prescriptions:—r., 1, railroad; railway; 2, rare; 3, received; 4, resides; residence; 5, retired; 6, right; 7, river; 8, rod; 9, road; 10, royal; 11, rises; 12, ruble; 13, rupee: Chess, rook; Baseball, run; runs.

ra (rä), n. [<Arab.], the tenth letter of the Arabic alphabet (see App. I), approximately equivalent to the English r; as a numerical symbol, 200.

Ra (rä), n. [<Egypt.], Egypt. Myth., the god of the sun; the supreme Egyptian deity. Also, Re (rā).

R. A. abbr. 1, Astron., Right Ascension; 2, Rear Admiral; 3, Regular Army; 4, Royal Academy; Royal Academician; 5, Royal Artillery:—Ra, Chem., the symbol [Ra] for the element radium.

raad (rät; räd), n. [Du. = council], a legislative assembly, or lawmaking body, of South Africa.

ra-ba-to (rä-bä'tō; -bä'tō), n. [pl. -tos (-tōz)], [<O.F. rabat, a ruff], a ruff or turndown collar formerly worn by men.

rab-bet (răb'ĕt; -ĭt), n. [<O.F. rabat, a recess <rabattre, to beat down], 1, a groove or slot made in the edge or face of one piece of wood to receive the edge of another piece; 2, a joint thus made:—v.t. 1, to cut such a groove in; 2, to join, as boards, by such a cut or groove:—v.i. to be joined by such a groove. Also, re-bate' (rē-bāt'; răb'ĕt).

rab-bi (răb'ī; -ī), n. [pl. rabbis; rabbies (-īz; -ĭz)], [<Heb. rabbī, my master <rabh, master], master; teacher; in Jewish usage, a doctor, or interpreter, of the law; especially, one ordained to deal with questions of law and ritual. Also, rab'bin (răb'ĭn).

Rab-bin-ic (rä-bĭn'ĭk), n. the dialect or language of the rabbis; later Hebrew: rabbinic, adj. pertaining to Jewish doctors of the law, their teachings, or their language.—adj. rab-bin'i-cal.

rab-bit (răb'ĭt), n. [<M.E. rabet: source uncertain], 1, a burrowing rodent (Lepus cuniculus) resembling, but smaller than, the hare; also, any of various hares, as the cottontail; 2, melted cheese variously prepared and poured over toasted bread or crackers: also called Welsh rabbit and, erroneously, rarebit:—v.i. to hunt, catch, or kill rabbits.

rab-bit-foot clo-ver a European clover (Trifolium arvense) with soft, silky heads: also called harefoot.

[1]rab-ble (răb'l), n. [<Fr. râble <Lat. rutabulum, fire shovel <ruere (rutus), to shake up], an iron bar for stirring molten pig iron or steel in puddling, steelmaking, etc., so as to mix it and expose it to the action of the air:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. rabbled (-ld), p.pr. rabbling], to stir with an iron bar.

[2]rab-ble (răb'l), n. [perh. <Du. rabbelen, to chatter], a mob: the rabble, the lowest rank of society; the mob:—adj. noisy; disorderly:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. rabbled (-ld), p.pr. rabbling], to mob.

Syn. crowd, populace. (See throng.)

rab-bo-ni (rä-bō'nī; -nĭ), n. [Heb. = my great master], teacher; master: a title of respect and reverence used by the Jews (John 20:16).

rab-id (răb'ĭd), adj. [<Lat. rabidus <rabere, to rave], 1, furious; raging; 2, excessively zealous; fanatical: Pathol., 1, affected with rabies; 2, pertaining to rabies.—adv. rab'id-ly.—n. rab'id-ness.

ra-bi-es (rā'bi-ēz), n. [Lat. <rabere, to rave], hydrophobia; an acute, infectious, and, if not treated, fatal disease of mammals, especially carnivora, as the dog or wolf, characterized by choking, convulsions, vomiting, etc., and transmitted to man by the bite of an infected animal.

ra-ca (rā'kä; rä-kä'), adj. [<Gk. rhaka <Sem. rēkā, worthless], worthless: used by the Jews of the time of Christ to express contempt (Matt. 5:22).

rac-coon (rä-kōōn'), n. [<Amer. Ind. arakun], a small, nocturnal North American carnivorous animal (Procyon lotor) related to the bears, having grayish brown fur, black markings on the head, and a bushy tail: often called coon. Also, ra-coon'.

[1]race (rās), n. [<O.N. rās, a running, a race; a channel], 1, rapid, progressive movement; 2, a swift current of water or the channel for such a current; specifically, a watercourse made for industrial purposes; as, a tide or mill race; 3, the air current from the screw propeller of an airplane; 4, the course of life; career; as, my race is run; 5, a competitive contest of speed, as in running, swimming, or the like; 6, a channel or slot along which some part of a machine moves, as the groove holding the balls in a ball bearing: pl. a series of contests between horses on a regular course:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. raced (rāst), p.pr. racing], 1, to run swiftly; 2, to compete in speed; 3, to run too fast, as a machine, because of a lightened load; 4, to engage in the business or sport of racing horses:—v.t. 1, to cause to move swiftly; as, he raced me along; 2, to drive, as horses or cars, at great speed, or in a race; 3, to contend with in a speed contest.

[2]race (rās), n. [Fr. <It. razza, breed, lineage: source uncertain], 1, the descendants of a common ancestor; a genealogical line or stock; a family; 2, a class of persons having common interests, characteristics, etc., as if derived through common descent; as, the race of poets; 3, a great division of mankind, made up of tribes and nations descended from a common stock, having the same distinguishing characteristics; as, the Negro race; 4, a branch of one such division, forming a tribal or national stock, made up of peoples having the same minor peculiarities and traits; as, the Latin race; 5, human beings as a class; mankind in general: commonly referred to as the race: Obs., peculiar quality, or flavor, as of wine: Bot. and Zoöl., 1, an artificially developed and perpetuated breed of animals or variety of plants, possessing certain inherited distinguishing minor characteristics which tend to disappear when cultivation ceases; 2, a subspecies with minor distinguishing features, usually found within a given area.

ra-ceme (rā-sēm′; rā-), n. [< Lat. racemus, a bunch of berries or grapes], Bot., a flower cluster in which blooms grow single-stemmed at almost regular distances along a stalk, as in the lily of the valley (for illus. see inflorescence).—adj. rac′e-mose (rās′ē-mōs).

rac-er (rās′ėr), n. [see ¹race], 1, one who engages in a speed contest; anything having power to go at great speed, as a horse, boat, etc.; 2, any of various snakes; especially, the American black snake.

race su-i-cide the deliberate limitation of the birth rate, for economic or other reasons, by the families of any race or racial group, to such an extent that it is exceeded by the death rate.

race-way (rās′wā″), n. [¹*race*+way], 1, a water channel; 2, a tube for protecting electric wires, as in a conduit: Mech., a race (see ¹*race*, illus.).

Ra-chel (rā′chėl), n. [< Heb. Rākhēl, a ewe], Bib., the wife of Jacob and mother of Joseph and Benjamin (Gen. 30:25; 35:16–19).

ra-chis (rā′kis), n. [pl. rachises (-ēz; -iz); rachides (rāk′i-dēz; rā′ki-)], [< Gk. rhakhis, spine], Anat., the spinal column; Bot., the stem of a grass, etc., bearing flower stalks at short intervals; the axis of a pinnately compound leaf or frond; Zoöl., the shaft of a feather, bearing the barbs (see feather, illus.). Also, rha′chis.

ra-chi-tis (rā-kī′tis), n. Pathol., a constitutional disease of infancy, generally due to malnutrition, and characterized by softening and deformity of the bones: commonly called rickets; Bot., a certain disease of fruits and seeds.—adj. ra-chit′ic (rā-kit′ik).

ra-cial (rā′shal), adj. [see ²race], pertaining to a division or family of men.—adv. ra′cial-ly.

¹rack (rāk), n. [perh. < O.N. rek, drift, wreckage: cf. O.N. skyreck, drifting clouds], thin, broken, vapory clouds:—v.i. to scud before the wind, as clouds. Also, wrack.

a, rack; b, geared with pinion; c, geared with worm.

²rack (rāk), n. [< M.Du. rec, rail], 1, a framework on or in which articles are hung or arranged; specifically, a bar grating above a manger for holding fodder, or a framework fitted to a wagon for hauling bulky loads, as hay; 2, a wrenching or straining, as by storms; 3, Mech., a bar having teeth on one side that engage the teeth of a gear (see illus.):—v.t. to place on or in a framework or grating.

³rack (rāk), n. [prob. < M.Du. recken, to stretch], 1, an instrument for torturing the body by stretching or straining the limbs; 2, hence, intense physical or mental anguish:—v.t. 1, to stretch on, or as on, such an instrument of torture; 2, to subject to great physical or mental anguish; as, racked with remorse; 3, to strain; tear apart; figuratively, to exert to the utmost; as, to rack one's brain; 4, to oppress; obtain by, or as by, extortion; as, to rack rent from tenants.

TORTURE ON THE RACK
Showing victim in position which dislocates shoulder joints, stretched by rope and windlass and burned by torch or hot iron.

Syn., v. torture, torment, wrench, rend. (See break.)

⁴rack (rāk), n. [var. of wrack: see wreck], Rare, destruction: used only in the phrase rack and ruin. Also, wrack.

⁵rack (rāk), v.t. [< Prov'l arracar, to drain off < raca, stems and skins of grapes], to draw off, or drain, (liquor) from the dregs at the bottom.

⁶rack (rāk), n. [source uncertain], a gait of a horse in which the feet on the same side move together; a pace; also, a certain gait resembling the pace:—v.i. to pace.

¹rack-et (rāk′ėt; -it), n. [perh. imit.], 1, a clattering noise; din; noisy talk or play; 2, a scene of excitement or noisy gaiety; carouse: Slang, a trick, scheme or game; especially, an organized activity of the criminal underworld, as bootlegging:—v.i. 1, to make a din; 2, to carouse; frolic noisily.—adj. rack′et-y.

Syn., n. hubbub, uproar, commotion. (See noise.)

²rack-et (rāk′ėt), n. [< Fr. raquette, a racket], 1, a network bat used in tennis and similar games (for illus. see lacrosse); 2, a broad wooden shoe used by men or horses in walking over soft ground; also, a snowshoe: pl. a certain game for two or four persons, played in a four-walled court. Also, rac′quet; rac-quette′.

rack-et-eer (rāk″ėt-ēr′), n. [prob. < ¹*racket*], one who makes a din, or who carouses: Slang, a person, especially a member of an organized gang, who engages in bootlegging or other typical activity of the criminal underworld, as gambling, opium peddling, commercialized prostitution, extortion, etc.

rack rent exhorbitant or excessively high rent; rent placed at or beyond the utmost rental value of the property. Also, n. rack′rent″.

ra-con-teur (rā″kôn″tûr′), n. [pl. -teurs (-tûrz′; -tûr′)], [Fr. = one who relates < raconter, to relate], a clever teller of stories; one who relates anecdotes well.—n.fem. ra″con″teuse′ (-tōz′).

ra-coon (rā-kōōn′), n. [see raccoon], a small, grayish brown North American mammal having a bushy, ringed tail. See rac-coon′, Pfd. S.

rac-quet (rāk′ėt), n. [see ²racket], a network bat used in tennis, etc. See ²rack′et, Pfd. S.

rac-y (rās′ī), adj. [comp. -ier, superl. -iest], [see ²race], 1, retaining traces of origin; 2, having characteristics that would indicate origin; rich; fragrant; as, racy wine; 3, mentally stimulating; lively; spirited; as, a racy style: Colloq., suggestive or immodest; as, a racy story.—adv. rac′i-ly.—n. rac′i-ness.

rad. abbr. 1, radical: the mathematical sign or symbol [√]; 2, radix.

ra-da (rä′dä), n. [Ukrainian < O. H. G. rāt, counsel], in the Ukraine, a deliberative assembly.

¹rad-dle (rad′l), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. raddled (-ld), p.pr. raddling], [< O.F. reddalle, a stout stick; the pole of a cart: source uncertain], to weave or twine together:—n. 1, a fence, hedge, floor, etc., of intertwined rods or stakes; 2, a rod, etc., used for interlacing.

ra-di-al (rā′dī-al), adj. [see radius], spreading out from a center, as rays of light or radii: Anat., pertaining to the radius, or bone on the thumb side of the forearm: radial engine, an internal-combustion engine having its cylinders arranged around the shaft like spokes around a hub.—adv. ra′di-al-ly.

ra-di-an (rā′dī-ān), n. Math., an arc of a circle equal in length to the radius: also, the angle at the center measured by such an arc, equal to 57° 17′ 44.8″.

ra-di-ance (rā′dī-ans), n. [see radiant], brilliancy; luster; brightness.—n. ra′di-an-cy.

ra-di-ant (rā′dī-ant), adj. [< Lat. radians (-antis) giving off rays: see radiate], 1, sending out rays; 2, brilliant; splendid; as, radiant beauty; 3, beaming with kindness, joy, or the like; as, a radiant smile; 4, issuing or sent forth from a source; as, radiant energy:—n. Astron., a point in the sky from which shooting stars seem to proceed; Optics, the point or object from which light issues.—adv. ra′di-ant-ly.

Syn., adj. beaming, shining, brilliant. (See bright.)

Ra-di-a-ta (rā″dī-ā′tä), n. pl. [Lat.: see radiate], Zoöl., a former classification of animals, comprising invertebrates, as the starfishes, whose parts grow in raylike form about an axis.

ra-di-ate (rā′dī-āt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], [< Lat. radiare (-atus), to give off rays < radius, a ray], 1, to emit in streams of light or heat; 2, to scatter; diffuse, as happiness, love, or the like:—v.i. 1, to emit streams of energy, as of heat or light; 2, to beam or glow with love or the like:—adj. having rays or parts arranged in rays: Bot., bearing rays, or ray flowers; Art, ornamented with rays.

ra-di-a-tion (rā″dī-ā′shŭn), n. 1, the act of issuing and spreading in all directions from a center; as, the radiation of light or heat from a shining or heated body; the radiation of happiness; 2, that which is diffused or disseminated in all directions: Phys., the propagation of energy in the form of waves; also, the energy so propagated.

ra-di-a-tor (rā′dī-ā″tėr), n. 1, a body from which rays are sent out; 2, specifically, in heating systems, a set of pipes heated by some medium, as steam; 3, an appliance used to cool objects or places by radiation of water or air.

rad-i-cal (rad′ī-kal), n. [< Lat. radicalis, having roots < radix (-icis), root], 1, a root; a fundamental part or principle; 2, a word or root from which other words are formed; 3, one who cuts at the root of things; an extremist; a member of a party or group that advocates extreme or revolutionary reform in the established order: Chem., a group of atoms, a part of a molecule of a compound, which acts in combination as a single atom: also, radicle; Math., 1, a quantity considered as the root of another quantity: this relation being indicated by the use of the radical sign; 2, the radical sign [√]:—adj. 1, pertaining to the root or origin; 2, fundamental; intrinsic; as, a radical error; 3, going to the root; affecting the foundation; thoroughgoing; as, radical changes; 4, desiring extreme measures; belonging, or pertaining, to a political party that believes in extreme measures: Math., pertaining to the root of a number; Bot., pertaining, or belonging, to the root; arising from the stem at the summit of the root, as leaves: radical sign, a symbol [√], originally the initial r of Latin radix, placed before a quantity to indicate that its root is to be extracted.—adv. rad'i-cal-ly.

rad-i-cal-ism (răd'ĭ-kăl-ĭzm), n. extreme political liberalism; advocacy of revolutionary changes in laws and methods of government, with a view to remedying social conditions.

rad-i-cate (răd'ĭ-kāt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -cated, p.pr. -cating], to root; plant; establish:—v.i. to take root; become established.

rad-i-cle (răd'ĭ-kl), n. [< Lat. dim. of radix (-icis), root], Bot., 1, a rootlet: preferably, radicel (-sĕl); 2, the lower part of an embryo that develops into the primary root; Anat., any one of the smallest branches of a vein or nerve; Chem., (preferably, radical), a group of atoms acting in combination as a single atom.

ra-di-o (rā'dĭ-ō), n. [pl. -os (-ōz)], [see radiate], 1, anything transmitted or received by means of electromagnetic waves without the agency of intervening wires, as a communication by radiotelegraphy; 2, the use of wireless telegraphy or telephony; the general system of transmitting and receiving messages thereby; 3, equipment for transmitting or receiving messages by wireless telegraphy or telephony; especially, a radio receiving set:—adj. pertaining to radio: radio chemistry, that branch of chemistry which treats of radioactive substances and the phenomena produced by them: radio element, a radioactive element.

A Simple Vacuum-tube Radio Receiving Set

Alternating current is received from aërial Ae, and passes through primary coil PC to ground Gr, constituting primary circuit. Current of secondary circuit is thereby induced in secondary coil SC (tuned to required wavelength by variable condenser VC) and passes to filament F and grid B in vacuum tube VT, where it is rectified. F is heated by a current, regulated by rheostat R, from battery A, and emits negative electrons through grid G to plate P, made positive by battery B. From P current passes through tickler coil TC, inducing additional current in SC, to telephones T, where the electrical vibrations are transformed to audible vibrations. Grid condenser GC and grid leak GL aid vacuum tube in rectifying.

ra-di-o-ac-tive (rā"dĭ-ō-ăk'tĭv), adj. [radio+act], Phys., having the property of spontaneously emitting rays which consist either of electrified particles (alpha and beta rays) or of radiant energy of high frequency (gamma rays).

ra-di-o-ac-tiv-i-ty (rā"dĭ-ō-ăk-tĭv'ĭ-tĭ), n. Chem., 1, the property possessed by certain elements or substances, as radium, uranium, thorium, etc., of emitting various types of particles or rays; 2, the science treating of radioactive substances.

ra-di-o-bea-con (rā"dĭ-ō-bē'kn), n. [radio+beacon], a seacoast radio transmitting station which continually emits signals by which a vessel may determine its bearings.

ra-di-o-cast (rā'dĭ-ō-kăst"), v.t. [radio+(broad)cast], to send (addresses, speeches, music, etc.) by radiotelephone or radiotelegraph: more generally, broadcast; sometimes, radiobroadcast.

ra-di-o-fre-quen-cy (rā"dĭ-ō-frē'kwĕn-sĭ), n. Phys., a rate of vibration above 10,000 per second; specifically, of radio vibrations (usually electromagnetic vibrations), too rapid to be perceived by the human ear: distinguished from audio-frequency.—adj. ra"di-o-fre'quent.

ra-di-o-gram (rā'dĭ-ō-grăm"), n. [radio+(tele)gram], 1, a message sent out by radio, either as spoken words or by the use of dots and dashes; 2, the image, or picture, made on a sensitive plate by rays other than light, as radium rays, X rays, etc.; a skiagraph; a radiograph.

ra-di-o-graph (rā'dĭ-ō-grăf), n. [radio+-graph (< Gk. graphein, to write)], a picture obtained by invisible rays, as X rays; a radiogram:—v.t. to produce a picture of, by means of X rays, radium rays, etc.—n. ra"di-og'ra-phy.—n. ra"di-og'ra-pher.—adj. ra"di-o-graph'ic.—adv. ra"di-o-graph'i-cal-ly.

Ra-di-o-la-ri-a (rā"dĭ-ō-lā'rĭ-ă), n.pl. [L.L., dim. < Lat. radius, radius], Zoöl., a large order of marine protozoans having perforated shells, usually made of silica, and radiating pseudopods, or threadlike processes, which are used for locomotion and for taking food.—adj. and n. ra"di-o-la'rĭ-an.

ra-di-om-e-ter (rā"dĭ-ŏm'ĕ-tĕr), n. [radio+²*meter*], Phys., an instrument for detecting and measuring small amounts of radiant energy.

ra-di-o-phare (rā'dĭ-ō-fâr), n. [radio+phare, lighthouse (< Gk. Pharos, an island, site of an ancient lighthouse)], a radiotelegraph station for determining the position of ships at sea.

ra-di-o-phone (ra'dĭ-ō-fōn"), n. [radio+(tele)phone], Phys., a device for transmitting or receiving sounds by means of electromagnetic waves.

ra-di-os-co-py (rā"dĭ-ŏs'kō-pĭ), n. [radio+-scope (< Gk. skopos, a watcher)], examination of bodies by means of some form of radiant energy other than light, as the X rays.

ra-di-o-tel-e-gram (rā"dĭ-ō-tĕl'ĕ-grăm), n. [radio+telegram], a message sent through space by electromagnetic waves without the agency of wires; a radiogram.

ra-di-o-tel-e-graph (rā"dĭ-ō-tĕl'ĕ-grăf), n. [radio+telegraph], a telegraph for transmitting messages or signals by electromagnetic waves without the agency of wires.—adj. ra"di-o-tel"e-graph'ic.—n. ra"di-o-te-leg'ra-phy.

ra-di-o-tel-e-phone (rā"dĭ-ō-tĕl'ĕ-fōn), n. [radio+telephone], a telephone for transmitting or receiving messages by means of radiating electromagnetic waves.—n. ra"di-o-te-leph'o-ny.

ra-di-o-ther-a-py (rā"dĭ-ō-thĕr'ă-pĭ), n. [radio+therapy], Med., the use of X rays, radium rays, or other forms of radioactivity, for the treatment of disease.

ra-di-o-tho-ri-um (rā"dĭ-ō-thō'rĭ-ŭm), n. [radio+thorium], Chem., a radioactive substance [symbol RaTh], a decomposition product of thorium.

Syn. (see reality).

re-al-ist (rē′ăl-ĭst), n. one who believes in being true to the facts of life in art and literature: opposite of idealist: Philos., one who believes in the doctrine of realism (which see): opposite of nominalist.

re-al-is-tic (rē″ăl-ĭs′tĭk), adj. 1, presenting people and scenes as they actually exist; true to fact; lifelike; 2, pertaining to the philosophic doctrine of realism (which see).—adv. re″al-is′ti-cal-ly.

re-al-i-ty (rē-ăl′ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, the state or quality of being in existence, or of being actual; 2, that which exists or is actual; fact; truth.

Syn. truth, actuality, veracity, verity, truthfulness, realism. Reality is the property of being real, of really existing; reality is what is, despite appearances. It is opposed to the imaginary, the make-believe, the fictitious, the merely apparent, the artificial, the ostensible. It is a rest to tired minds to escape from reality into the world of make-believe. Some diamonds, apparently genuine, are in reality paste. Actuality is reality regarded as fact; actuality is opposed to what may be, what has been, what might have been, what somebody thought, said, or supposed to be the case; it is a surety, a certainty. It is said that figures never lie; in actuality, they are often manipulated so that they do. Truth is that quality of a person which compels him to make his acts and statements conform to fact, without insincerity or equivocation. Truth inheres also in things, and is evidenced in their reality, actuality, or mechanical accuracy or exactness. We speak of the truth of a statement. Veracity is the quality of a person who is disposed to, and habitually does, speak the truth; a veracious man might tell something untrue, but it would not be meant as falsehood. Truth is sometimes used in this sense of veracity; we speak of a person of veracity or of truth, indicating a basic trend of his character. Truthfulness may apply to the quality that makes a man veracious, but it oftenest refers to the innate truth of a statement, or the sincerity underlying a belief or stand. Verity, like truth, is an exact conformance to fact; it is a habit of thought, manifested in speech. Reality, realism, and verity are often used of representations in art or literature of life or things. Something reproduced with reality is so strikingly real that the observer feels the reaction of actuality; "startling reality" is a well-worn phrase. Verity is such truthful representation as convinces, is sincere, impresses with its reality. Realism, opposed to idealism, presents every detail in a practical way, sparing nothing, revealing everything.

re-al-i-za-tion (rē″ăl-ĭ-zā′shŭn), n. 1, the act of making, or causing to appear, actual or true to nature or fact; 2, the state of being present to the mind as actual or real: 3, the act of perceiving the true character, or of feeling fully and keenly; as, he had no realization of his danger; 4, the converting or changing of real estate or other property into money.

rec-ti-fi-ca-tion (rĕk"tĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [see rectify], the act of correcting or setting right: Chem., the process of refining or purifying by distillation or other means; Elec., the process of changing alternating into direct current.

rec-ti-fy (rĕk'tĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [< Fr. rectifier < L.L. rectificare < Lat. rectus, right + facere, to make], 1, to correct the faults in; remove mistakes from; set right; 2, to refine or purify, as liquids, by distillation; 3, to adjust correctly: Elec., to change from alternating to direct, as an electric current; Math., to find the length of (a curved line).—n. rec'ti-fi"er.

Syn. correct, reform, amend, improve, mend, repair. Correct and rectify are often used interchangeably in the sense of setting right, amending, or making good. We correct or rectify errors. When a distinction between these words is observed, it lies in the fact that correct connotes the idea of making right according to a standard, as of accuracy, convention, or the like, and in this respect is more definite than rectify, which carries the idea of making a wrong thing right, as a mistake, or of setting right, as a false judgment. We correct a wrong statement; we rectify the wrong opinion which produced it. We correct, not rectify, printer's proof. To reform is to make a more sweeping change than that underlying either correct or rectify, though in order to reform, that which is wrong must be corrected or rectified. A city government in which bad practices have been corrected or a country in which conditions of riot and general disregard of law and order have been rectified is reformed.

rec-ti-lin-e-ar (rĕk"tĭ-lĭn'ē-ăr), adj. [< Lat. rectus, right + linea, line], 1, moving in a straight line; 2, bounded by straight lines; characterized by straight lines: Optics, forming an image free from the distortion of straight lines: said of a photographic lens. Also, rec"ti-lin'e-al.

rel-ish (rĕl'ĭsh), n. [< O.F. reles, aftertaste, that which is left over: see release], 1, a taste or preference: fondness; liking; eager appreciation; zest: usually with for; as, a relish for adventure; 2, flavor, especially when pleasing or distinctive; as, that wine has a delightful relish; hence, 3, figuratively, that quality in anything which gives pleasure; enjoyment; zest; delight; as, dangers add relish to an adventure; 4, a sort of condiment taken with food to render it more enjoyable, as a sauce, or to stimulate the appetite, as olives; seasoning; savor; 5, a slight amount; a smack; a dash; as, his act has a relish of treason in it:—v.t. 1, to give flavor to; as, salt relishes meat; 2, to like the taste of; delight in; enjoy: Obs., 1, to taste or smack of; 2, to appreciate: —v.i. 1, to have a pleasing or savory taste; 2, to yield an agreeable taste; hence, 3, to afford gratification.

RELIQUARY

Syn., n. fondness, taste, gusto, zest, flavor, enjoyment.

re-lu-cent (rē-lū'sĕnt), adj. [< Lat. relucens (-entis), shining back], luminous; shining.

re-luc-tance (rē-lŭk'tăns), n. [see reluctant], unwillingness; disinclination; aversion: Elec., resistance to magnetization: Obs., opposition. Also, re-luc'tan-cy.

re-luc-tant (rē-lŭk'tănt), adj. [< Lat. reluctans (-antis), struggling against < re-, against + luctari, to struggle], 1, unwilling; loath; disinclined; as, reluctant to leave; 2, marked by, or due to, unwillingness; granted unwillingly or ungraciously; as, a reluctant acceptance: Obs., opposing; offering resistance of some kind.—adv. re-luc'tant-ly.

Syn. averse, unwilling, indisposed, loath, opposed, backward.—Ant. eager, disposed, willing, inclined.

rel-uc-tiv-i-ty (rĕl"ŭk-tĭv'ĭ-tĭ), n. Elec., specific magnetic resistance; the resistance to magnetization exerted by a one-centimeter cube of a given medium: the reciprocal of permeability.

re-lume (rē-lūm'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -lumed (-lūmd'), p.pr. -luming], [< Lat. re-, again + luminare, to light < lumen, light], to light again; rekindle. Also, re-lu'mine (-lū'mĭn).

re-ly (rē-lī'), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. relied (-līd'), p.pr. relying], [< O.F. relier, to bind together < Lat. re-, again + ligare, to bind], to trust; have confidence in someone or something; depend: with on or upon.

Syn. confide, repose, lean, depend, trust.

re-main (rē-mān'), v.i. [< O.F. remaindre < Lat. re-, back + manēre, to stay], 1, to stay behind while others go; stay in the same place; abide; as, he alone remained in camp; 2, to continue in existence; endure; persist; last; as, the memory of that day remains; 3, to continue in the same given state; as, to remain a bachelor; 4, to be left after a part has been used, taken away, lost, or destroyed; as, little of his wealth remains; 5, to be left for future consideration or use; be held in reserve; as, that remains to be decided:—n. usually pl. 1, the part or parts left, as of a meal; surviving members, as of a nation; 2, ruins, as of a temple; 3, a relic or relics; survival, as of a custom, period, etc.: pl. 1, a dead body; corpse; 2, the literary product of an author who is dead.

Syn., v. abide, continue, last, endure, halt, stand, stop, tarry.—Ant., v. leave, flee, depart, perish.

re-main-der (rē-mān'dēr), n. the portion or number left after anything is taken away; remnant; balance; surplus; specifically, in publishing, the number of copies of a book or magazine left on the publisher's hands after demand has ceased: Math., 1, the quantity left after any deduction, as in subtraction; 2, the part, less than the divisor, left over after division; Law, an estate which is not to come into effect until some future date or until the happening of a certain event: generally divided into vested remainder, a fixed present interest to be enjoyed in the future, and contingent remainder, a future interest to take effect only under certain conditions: —adj. remaining; left over.

Syn., n. leavings, surplus, remnant, residue, balance. Remainder, remnant, and residue agree in naming that which is left when the other part, often the greater part, has been taken away. Remainder is general in its application; we speak of the remainder obtained by the process of subtraction; the remainder of our life. Remnant usually names a fragment; as, a remnant of cloth left at the end of a bolt; figuratively, remnant may name a scattered few, or a small surviving group of people, the rest of whom have suffered dispersion, calamity, or extinction. Residue technically is a residuum, or residual product left from some process; ordinarily it is that which remains after a separation, removal, settlement, or the like. The residue of an estate is that which is left when all debts and previous requirements are settled. Balance in the sense of the rest or the remainder is incorrectly used. The difference between one's credits and debits is a balance struck; the unpaid part of a debt, a balance due; but this is a different idea from that carried by remainder, residue, and remnant. It is correct to call a deficiency in an account the balance due; it is incorrect to say that you are going to refrain from work for the balance of the day.

re-mand (rē-mănd'), v.t. [< O.F. remander < Lat. re-, back + mandare, to order], to call, order, or send back; as, to remand an officer to his post: Law, to recommit to prison or custody after a partial or preliminary examination; as, the prisoner was remanded:—n. 1, the sending back of an accused person to custody after a hearing, to permit the obtainment of further evidence; 2, the judicial order sending him back.

Syn. disclaim, disavow, renounce, discard, recant, retract, resign. One disavows a statement which he did not make, a principle which he does not hold, an act which he did not commit. One disclaims a connection of which he is ashamed, a character falsely attributed to him, the authorship of a book which he did not write. To renounce, repudiate, and resign are more forceful terms, connoting a positive, sometimes a public, casting aside or giving up of that before held or approved. One renounces formally that which he no longer believes, as a doctrine, or that to which he has some right, as a claim, or that which should in consistency by him be foregone; as, celibates renounce marriage. One repudiates with a gesture of rejection; among the ancients, a wife unwanted or faithless was repudiated. A tincture of the repulsion thus attached to the word still clings to it, whether one repudiates a dogma, the authority back of it, a prodigal son, a gift, or an obligation. To resign is formally to give up a position to which one has been elected or for which one has been selected. To recant and retract refer to disclaiming that which has been said or maintained; to recant is to withdraw, usually publicly, a formerly sponsored belief, opinion, or declaration. To retract is to take back openly what was said of another, as an untrue statement, or false charge. To discard is to throw away what is considered valueless, as old clothes; figuratively, one discards outgrown desires, false friends, unworthy ambitions.—Ant. acknowledge, own, admit, keep.

rev-o-lu-tion (rĕv″ō-lū'shŭn), n. [see revolve], 1, the course or motion of a body, especially a heavenly body, around another body or central point or axis considered as fixed; 2, the motion of a body that is turning about an axis outside itself: applied strictly to motion such that any line of the body remains parallel to its initial position, and distinguished from rotation; 3, a succession of changes or events happening in a cycle; as, the revolution of the months; 4, the time occupied by such a cycle; circuit; 6, a sudden change in the government of a country; the overthrow of one form of government and the setting up of another; 6, any decided and sudden change: surface of revolution, a surface conceived as generated by the revolution of a line about an axis, as the surface of a sphere or of a right circular cone or cylinder: the Revolution, in the United States, the revolt of the American colonies against Great Britain (1775–83).

Syn. sedition, mutiny, anarchy, insurrection, revolt, rebellion, riot, confusion. The idea underlying revolution, in a political sense, is a fundamental change of government brought about by those governed. A revolution may be accomplished, therefore, by bloody violence or without a struggle. Rebellion connotes actual fighting; it is organized, armed resistance to established government. A revolution peaceably accomplished through common consent has nothing in common with rebellion; but a revolution brought about by battle is a rebellion while it is in the fighting stage, a revolution when the ends are attained. The point of view may determine whether revolution or rebellion shall be used; the Revolution of 1776 would seem to the British to be a rebellion. Revolt is an uprising against constituted authority, which, in intention at least, lacks the scope of rebellion. An insurrection, as the word is applied to uprisings of tyrannically governed or enslaved peoples, is, like a revolt, a rebellion in its early or initial stage. Mutiny is revolt against constituted authority, commonly on the part of soldiers or sailors against officers. A riot is an outbreak of lawlessness or disorder on the part of a crowd, though the intention of the crowd is not necessarily unlawful. Sedition is the stirring up, plotting, or inciting of such rebellious agitation as tends to treason.

rev-o-lu-tion-a-ry (rĕv″ō-lū'shŭn-ā-rĭ), adj. 1, like or pertaining to a sudden and complete change in thought, doctrine, method, etc., especially in the government of a country; 2, tending to produce such complete changes: Rare, pertaining to revolving:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], a revolutionist.

rev-o-lu-tion-ist (rĕv″ō-lū'shŭn-ĭst), n. one who advocates sudden and complete change, as in a government.—n. rev″o-lu'tion-ism.

rev-o-lu-tion-ize (rĕv″ō-lū'shŭn-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], 1, to cause an entire change in the government, affairs, or character of; 2, to imbue with the desire for a complete change, as in ideas or government; 3, to alter completely; as, electricity has revolutionized industry.

re-volve (rē-vŏlv'), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. revolved (-vŏlvd'), p.pr. revolving], [< Lat. revolvere < re-, again + volvere (volutus), to roll], 1, to cause to turn or roll around; 2, to turn over and over in the mind:—v.i. 1, to move in a curved path about a center; 2, to turn round, as on an axis; rotate; 3, to move in cycles; recur at regular intervals; as, the seasons revolve: Obs., to consider; meditate.—adj. re-volv'a-ble.
